N.Y. Rangers aim to oust Washington

(AP) — After knocking off the highly-regarded Philadelphia Flyers in five tough games, the New York Rangers are looking for easier pickings against the Washington Capitals in the second round of the Stanley Cup playoffs.

"It should be a little bit easier than Philly," New York forward Tomas Sandstrom said as the confident Rangers prepared to face the Capitals in the best-of-seven Patrick Division finals starting Thursday night in Landover, Md. "I think we can beat them. It's good to start with two games on the road — we only have to win one."

With a 5-2 victory over the Flyers in the decisive game of the division semifinal series Tuesday night, the Rangers joined the other underdogs who prevailed in upset-studded first-round NHL games.

The most notable were three-game sweeps by the lowly Toronto Maple Leafs over the Chicago Blackhawks in the Norris Division and the Hartford Whalers over the Quebec Nordiques in the Adams. Both Chicago and Quebec won the regular-season championships in their divisions. The Flyers were the third division champion to go down in first-round knockouts.

"We believe in ourselves," said Rangers goaltender John Vanbiesbroeck, one of the key players in New York's stunning series triumph over the Flyers, a team that had beaten them 18 of 19 times before the start of the playoffs and finished with the second-best record in the league.

Along with the Rangers-Caps series, Hartford will play Montreal Thursday night in the opening of the Adams Division finals. On Friday night, Toronto will take on St. Louis, a 6-3 winner over Minnesota Tuesday night, in the Norris finals. The Smythe final will also start Friday night, with defending Stanley Cup champion Edmonton hosting Calgary.

The Rangers, the NHL's third-best defensive team statistically this year, will have to play the Capitals without captain Ron Greschner. He suffered an injured hand in Tuesday night's victory at the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

In Montreal, Canadiens General Manager Serge Savard said he was "afraid" of the Whalers.

"We are going to have our hands full," Savard said. "The Nordiques faced one of the hottest teams in our division, if not in the league."

Canadiens Coach Jean Perron said he hoped to continue the disciplined type of hockey that helped Montreal sweep Boston out of the playoffs.

NCAA: A&M not in clear on Murray car scandal

Official says school responsible for booster

The NCAA says the controversy surrounding A&M quarterback Kevin Murray, above, does involve the university, not just Murray.

FORT WORTH (AP) — NCAA official said Wednesday Texas A&M Coach Jackie Sherrill could be mistaken in his assertion that the school will draw no penalty from a controversy concerning quarterback Kevin Murray.

Sherrill said recently that the fair is between Murray and NCAA and that the university is involved. He based his conclusion on the fact that the allegations against his star quarterback involved "booster" over whom the school has no control, and that the matter is not related to recruiting.

"Well, he (Sherrill) may feel that way, but it isn't exactly true," NCAA legislative assistant Steve Horton, who is familiar with the case, told Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Horton cited an NCAA regulation that, in part, states: "An institution's responsibility for the conduct of its athletic program shall include responsibility for acts of individuals when a member of the institution's executive or athletics administration has knowledge or should have had knowledge of such an individual... is a member of an agency or organization participating in the institution's athletic program, has made financial contributions to the athletics department, an athletics booster organization... has assisted in providing transportation to enrolled student-athletes."

"Stated more simply, if you're responsible for the actions of your boosters — particularly if they are prominent," Horton said in the newspaper. "The school is found to be in violation of the rule if it is determined that it should have known what the booster was doing."

In September, several members of the booster in question, Dockery of Dallas, alleged that Murray had received an automobile from Dockery on a lease agreement without having to make payments. A&M asked the NCAA to investigate the matter and is currently reviewing the allegations.

Aggies to vie for national sailing title

By Alissa Lehmann Reporter

The defending national champion Texas A&M-Galveston sailing team will compete in the national collegiate sailing championship in Annapolis, Md., this weekend.

A&M-Galveston won the Kennedy Cup last year along with the Judge's Trophy for seamanship. Chris Sabine, a returning team member from last year's crew, said the team was the first to win both awards.

The team had to fight for the chance to return for this year's race and found out only two weeks ago that it would be going for sure, Sabine said.

There are seven districts represented at the race along with three invitational competitors. The Southeastern Intercollegiate Sailing Association consists of Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, and part of Florida.

Since there are not many active competitors in the SISA district, Sabine said Oklahoma State University will represent the SISA district on the basis of rotation.

Sabine said A&M-Galveston was originally not invited back to fill one of the invitational slots. He said the invitational slots are usually given as an extra slot for the very active districts.

He said this left no provisions for last year's winners to return. But after many phone calls and much discussion, Sabine said the team was invited back.

Friday, the competing teams will be given a chance to practice on the 44-foot Ludder yawls used in the race. The A&M-Galveston team hasn't had a chance to practice on a 44-foot Ludder yawl, Sabine said, because they aren't very common in this area.

On Saturday and Sunday, three races are scheduled.

Mike Van Dyke, skipper of this year's team, said the teams compete aboard identical boats.

"By using identical boats, the competition is focused on ability and seamanship, not on technology," Van Dyke said.

Sabine said each team chooses a number from a hat to choose the order before the races begin. All teams he said, start at the same time.

The race is based on a low scale, Sabine said. The first winner of each race receives one point, the second place winner receives two and so on. The team with the lowest final score is the champion.

Sabine said he anticipated the university of Santa Barbara to be the team the most competition for this year's championship.

Among some of A&M-Galveston's other competitors will be the U.S. Naval Academy and Yale, Sabine said.

Theo,
How about an aggie diploma pre-order sale? 10% off any aggie diploma frame for May graduation ordered by April 19. Grads can save money while I make sure I have enough frames on hand.
Sharon, shop manager

Sharon-
Sounds good to me... if frames are ordered in advance, graduates can bring their diplomas by the shop (after the ceremony) and we can put their diploma in their frame the same day!
