Residents probe wreckage, emotions after plane crash

GERRITOS, Calif. (AP) — Street sweepers scrubbed blood and ash from the pavement Wednesday as residents tried to cope with the horrible memories of the day a jetliner crashed in their neighborhood.

"It'll never be normal. Never," Randy Economy said of his neighborhood. "The emotional scars are there too badly. When I take a walk here at night, that's all I think about: the horror of seeing bodies flying, the screaming, and myself, helpless to do anything."

Economy, 26, has had little sleep since the crash. "I don't want to sleep anymore," he said. "I keep hearing the noise — the horrible sound of that impact."

Economy also is disturbed by the crowds of curious people who have been streaming into the neighborhood to see Sunday's disaster scene.

"It's macabre," he said. "On Sunday, a head landed in my neighbor's yard and a guy tried to walk off with it."

Several numbed residents searched through the remnants of their homes for belongings.

As Ivan Medina picked through the half-gutted home where he'd lived for 2½ years, he said, "At this time I have no plans at all. I'm just taking one day at a time."

"Probably, it will take me about a week before I settle down completely, and get over with this shock," he said.

Beside Medina's home, 15-year-old Rochelle Neally waited with a relative for authorities to allow them to search the charred hulk of her home for a metal box with the family's insurance policy and other documents.

She had fled from the house with her parents, her sister and a friend during the flaming chaos. All escaped, but her father and sister suffered burns.

But she said her father wants to stay and rebuild.

Clergy and psychologists canvassed the neighborhood, offering support and distributing notices listing services that range from counseling to police protection.

Six park employees swept the streets and raked debris from lawns. Burned-out vans and cars were piled on an empty lot where a house once stood.

At least 67 people died aboard an Aeromexico DC-9 and a single-engine Piper Archer that collided Sunday above Cerritos. The number of people who died on the ground is unknown, with some estimates reaching as high as 24.

Isabel Langerman said her 10-year-old daughter did not want to go into her bedroom after the accident. "It's never bothered her before," Langerman said. "But now she says it's too dark."

David Remo, a psychiatric technician from Los Angeles County, said, "Nobody took it well. Shock, some despair. Denial. . . . The psychological implications of a disaster like this are sometimes beyond words. How do you define despair?"
