White credits refusal to sign, veto bill to personal belief

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White's decision to allow the pari-mutuel gambling bill to become law without his signature drew fire Thursday from the Christian Life Commission and White's Republican opponent, former Gov. Bill Clements.

In announcing his decision Wednesday, White said his Baptist convictions and his personal beliefs make him opposed to gambling. He said he will vote against it when the question is placed on the ballot next year.

However, White said he also believes it's his duty as a public official to give voters the last word on the controversy, so he allowed the bill establishing the November 1987 gambling referendum to become law without his signature.

Gary McNeil, spokesman for the Christian Life Commission — an arm of the Baptist General Convention of Texas — said White had "allowed gambling to hijack the special sessions of 1986," which the governor called to solve the state's $2.8 billion budget deficit.

McNeil warned that voters may never decide on the referendum if a court rules it unconstitutional or illegal. The bill was written to provide that if the referendum is struck down by the courts, the remainder of the legislation still takes effect.

"If the gambling proponents do not strike it down in the courts, which is a likely possibility, and there is a referendum in November 1987, we will work strenuously and vigorously with the religious community across Texas and other folks to defeat this bill," McNeil said.

The sponsors of the legislation, Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas, and Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi, said they expected the referendum to be held and pari-mutuel betting to win voter approval.

Clements, meanwhile, chastized White for refusing to sign or veto the bill, saying it was another sign of White's "lack of leadership" and called White's action a "political shell game."

"If Mark White was against the bill, he should have vetoed it," Clements said. "If Mark White is in favor of the bill, or if he feels the issue should be brought before the people of Texas, he should have signed it into law. Where is this man's backbone?"

Clements said that since 1978, he has advocated allowing the people to vote on the pari-mutuel question.

Pennzoil shifts activity to parent company

HOUSTON (AP) — Pennzoil Co.'s board of directors approved a plan to transfer most of its oil and gas exploration and production activities to the parent company, officials said Thursday.

The board said it believed the inter-corporation restructuring will provide Pennzoil with optimum flexibility under rapidly changing conditions, according to a company statement.

Directors approved the transfer of all oil and gas exploration and production activities except those of the eastern division to Pennzoil, spokesman Mickey Gentry said.

In addition, the board also approved formation of three wholly-owned subsidiaries: Pennzoil Sulphur Co., Pennzoil Products Co. and Richland Corp. Pennzoil Products will include the eastern exploration and products division, Gentry said.

Each subsidiary will have separate management. Richland will manage Pennzoil's ongoing real estate operations and Indonesian and Australian gold exploration, and also will provide continued staff support for the companies.

J. Hugh Liedtke, Pennzoil chairman and chief executive officer, said previous restructuring in recent months included the tax-free spin-off of Battle Mountain Gold Co. common stock to Pennzoil shareholders in August 1985.
