Senior legislature asks for programs to be left intact

AUSTIN (AP) — The Silver-Haired Legislature wrapped up four days of deliberations Thursday by urging state lawmakers not to cut spending on programs for the elderly.

The top priority set by the 116-member senior legislature also included a call for support for community-based services and alternatives for institutional care.

"We have come out with some outstanding resolutions across the board, and I believe they will be worth fighting for in the Legislature and back in our communities," said Raleigh Jackson of LaGrange, presiding officer of the Silver-Haired Legislature.

The spending resolution also said reasonable consideration should be given to increasing funds for programs for the elderly.

"I think they look at this as kind of a demand to the Legislature to maintain funding with the hopes of improving funding in certain areas," Jackson said.

The recommendations approved Thursday will be sent to the 70th Legislature when it convenes in January.

In addition to the combination top priority, the Silver-Haired Legislature approved the following priority issues:

- Increasing the allowable income for Medicaid recipients from the current $670 per month to $1,008 per month.
- Establishing a state-administered health insurance plan to cover catastrophic illness.
- Freezing property tax payments at age 65. School districts currently have such a freeze.
- Improving retirement benefits for teachers and state workers.
- Barring the taking of homes to pay off debts.

While calling for increased spending for some programs, delegates voted down a proposal to upgrade nursing home requirements.

The defeated nursing home resolution called for private rooms and increased minimum space requirements and delegates said it would unnecessarily increase the cost of nursing home care.
