Test results awaited on office bug

AUSTIN (AP) — The agent in charge of the Austin FBI office said Wednesday that investigators hope to know by Friday results of preliminary tests on the electronic bug found in the office of a Bill Clements campaign official.

FBI agent Byron Sage said the device was received by an FBI laboratory in Washington, D.C., on Tuesday. There it will undergo examination and fingerprint tests.

"We're trying to determine everything... who the manufacturer was, the capabilities of the device, its sophistication," Sage said.

The bug was found Sunday in the office of Karl Rove, strategist for Clements' campaign.

During an interview in Houston, where he made a speech Wednesday, Clements refused to comment. One of those interviewed Wednesday was a newspaper reporter who asked questions which Rove and Clements' campaign manager say triggered their decision to look for a bug.

Attlesy said he told the FBI and DPS that he obtained the information in an on-the-record interview with Harris Diamond of New York, White's political consultant. Diamond has said the information was readily available from television stations and political professionals.

Firefighters try to contain barge fire

DEER PARK (AP) — Firefighters worked Wednesday to stop an intense chemical blaze from spreading farther into the Houston Ship Channel, stranding at least 17 ships that were unable to leave or enter that part of the waterway.

Tanks and equipment surrounding the burning barge were saturated with water and foam to prevent the blaze from reaching the dock, officials said.

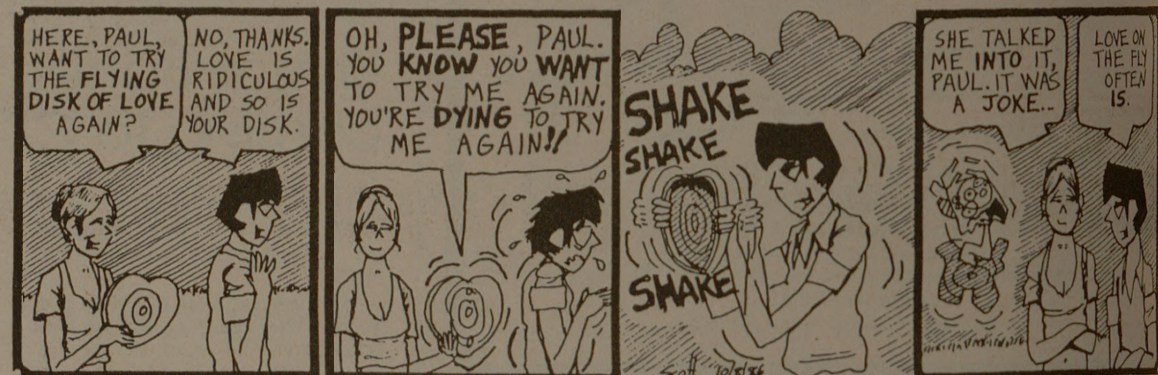

"Our strategy is to continue to contain the fire and let it burn itself out," said Stephen W. Miles, president of Intercontinental Terminals Co. The vessel was moored at the company's dock when the fire and explosions erupted early Tuesday.

An undetermined amount of the barge's cargo, a gasoline additive called methyl tertiary butyl ether, leaked into the channel as the front end sank, Miles said.

Coast Guard Ensign Lia Debetten-court said the fire began at 4 a.m. on the Barge Hollywood 3003 during a transfer of the gasoline product to another barge, which did not catch fire.

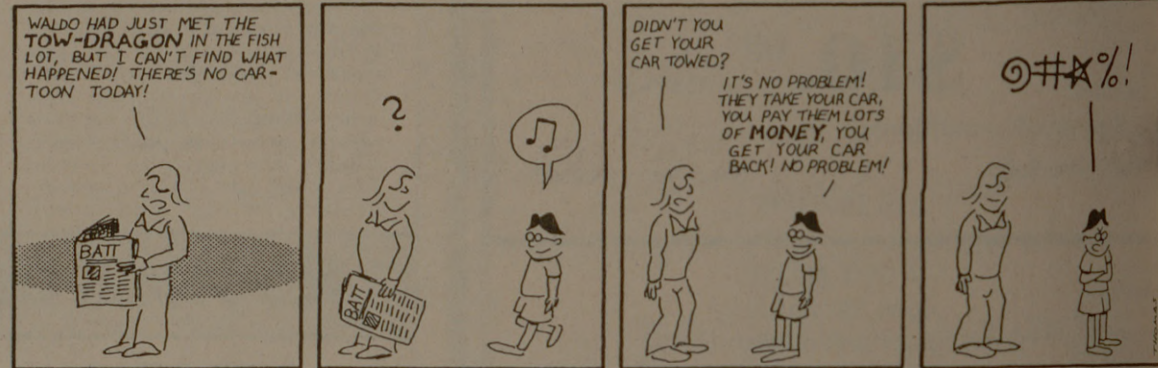

Coast Guard spokesman Mark Kennedy said the cause of the fire and explosions had not been determined.

Bryan restaurant managers unsure about smoking law

By Vickie Faour
Reporter

Bryan restaurant owners and managers have mixed feelings about a new smoking ordinance that requires restaurants to designate smoking and non-smoking areas.

Jim Talbot, manager of Casa Tomas, 4300 Texas Ave., said his business already has had problems with the new ordinance, which went into effect Oct. 1.

"Saturday night after the football game, it was awfully busy here and we almost had our first fist-fight," Talbot said. "In the rush, a smoker was accidentally seated in the non-smoking section. After the man finished eating, he lit up a cigar."

A non-smoker complained and both men began yelling, Talbot said.

"We ended up having to pick up the tab in order to keep peace," he said.

Talbot said the ordinance has given people something new to complain about.

"Instead of complaining about the food, the service or the temperature, they can complain about the smoke," he said.

Some of his employees are complaining, too, he said.

"By dividing up the restaurant into smoking and non-smoking areas," he said, "the waitpersons who have the smoking area might wait a long time before anyone gets seated at one of their tables." Talbot said to solve the problem, each waiter is responsible for a few tables in the smoking area and a few in their regular section.

Customers also complain about the location of the smoking areas, Talbot said.

"Our garden area is now for smokers only because it is sectioned off from the rest of the restaurant," he said. "The smokers feel that they are second-class citizens because they are being pushed to the back of the restaurant, and non-smokers want to sit where the smokers are sitting."

John Houseal, manager of Captains Half Shell Oyster Bar on 206 E. Villa Maria Road, also expressed reservations about the ordinance.

"I haven't had any problems yet," Houseal said, "but what worries me is how the ordinance is going to be enforced."

Bryan City Councilwoman Helen Chavarria said, "As long as the businesses post signs and are in compliance with the ordinance, the managers of the restaurants should not feel responsible for anything else."

Councilman Randy Sims, owner of Randy Sims Bar-B-Cue, 3824 Texas Ave., said the ordinance can't be enforced. He said he is not going to look for violators unless there is a complaint.

Sims said in the last 23 years he has had three people ask for a non-smoking section at his restaurant.

But other managers said they agree with the ordinance.

John Beltrand, owner of Tom's Barbecue, 4613 Texas Ave., said something had to be done sooner or later and the ordinance is a good move for non-smokers.

Tracey McCoy, manager of Steak & Ale Restaurant, 1710 Briarcrest Dr., said now it's the non-smokers' turn to speak up. She added that Steak & Ale always has had smoking and non-smoking areas, so the ordinance will not affect them.

Sims said some advocates of the ordinance believe that more non-smokers will go to a restaurant if they know it has designated smoking and non-smoking areas.

Houseal said that with the early closing hours and now the smoking ordinance, the Bryan restaurants are unable to compete with College Station restaurants.

"College Station gets most of the business in this area," he said.
