

Sooner players dream big, hope to give UT nightmares

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The question posed to several Oklahoma football players was simple: If you could have a dream game when you play the University of Texas on Saturday, what would it be?

The answers ranged from realistic to ridiculous, but all carried a common denominator — they'd like to make sure Oklahoma wins the game.

"I'd like to catch over 100 yards passing and score at least a couple of touchdowns against them," said split end Derrick Shepard, an Odessa native. "And get the win," he said.

Sonny Brown, senior defensive back from Alice, said a shutout would sit well. "Individually, I'd like to play the best game I ever have. Maybe make an interception or two, lots of tackles, no mistakes."

Center Travis Simpson, who played high school football in Norman, said pride is at stake for more reasons than the normal Red River Rivalry.

"For me, being a hometown boy, a dream game would be to play the best game I've ever played," he said.

Enid native Lydell Carr said his dream game would include "a win, of course, a 200-yard ball game, which I desperately need, and a couple touchdowns."

Defensive end Troy Johnson of Houston said he'd like to see Texas held to negative yardage. It happened in the second half of last year's game as the Longhorns gained just 70 yards in total offense on the day.

Offensive guard Mark Hutson, like his mate Simpson, would like to see the offensive line roll.

"I'd like to look back and be able to say we dominated the game on the offensive front," Hutson said.

If that were to happen, players such as halfback Patrick Collins would benefit. Collins has already had a dream game, scoring the game-winning touchdown a year ago on a 45-yard run.

"If I could go out and average five or six yards every time I touch the ball, and have a good game on the punt and kick returns, that would be a game I would remember," said the Tulsa native.

Tight end Keith Jackson, from Little Rock, Ark., has caught four passes in four games and is still hoping for his dream game.

"I'd like to catch two touchdown passes, and catch five passes for 140 yards to top my best game which I had last year against Missouri," he said.

Perhaps no one dreams bigger than offensive tackle Jon Phillips, who will start in his first Texas game.

"I'd like a whole day of nothing but total success, a total roll," said the Tulsa native. "Then, toward the end of the game, to run a tackle reverse and have me score a touchdown."

on a ground ball to first by Doran. But, with the Mets infield playing in, Denny Walling hit a grounder to Santana at shortstop, and Bass was thrown out at home. Davis flied out to end the inning.

Bass led off the sixth with his second hit, a single. One out later, he stole second, and Ashby walked. Reynolds flied out to deep right field, allowing Bass to tag up for third, but Gooden struck out Scott looking to end the inning.

Scott, meanwhile, had his split-fingered fastball working to near perfection. His 1986 strikeout total tied Sandy Koufax for the fifth highest total in NL history, and by striking out the last two batters in the first and the first two in the second, he tied an NL playoff record.

He became the fourth pitcher to fan four in a row, the last being Joaquin Andujar last year with St. Louis. The victims were Keith Hernandez, Gary Carter, Strawberry and Mookie Wilson, the heart of the Mets order.

Before he was struck out, Carter asked home plate umpire Doug Harvey to check the ball for scratch marks. Carter and other Mets have accused Scott of doctoring the ball with sandpaper. The crowd booed Carter, then cheered loudly when Harvey threw the ball back to Scott.

trouble when Barrett was trapped off base on Rice's one-out grounder to short.

The Red Sox, aided by some luck, seemed on the verge of breaking the game open in the second. Rich Gedman opened with a single and Owen hit a grounder that took a bad hop over Schofield's head at shortstop for a single. Boggs then hit a chopper that McCaskill appeared to lose in the sun and fumbled. Boggs was credited with a single that loaded the bases.

Barrett lined a single to left that made it 2-0 and gave Boston seven hits, two more than they had Tuesday night against Mike Witt in losing the opener 8-1.

The Angels narrowed it to 2-1 in fourth, aided by some shoddy fielding. Brian Downing and Doug DeCinces led off with singles and were running on a 3-2 pitch to Grich with one out. Grich hit a grounder to Boggs, who was running into position on the steal attempt, but the ball kicked off the heel of Boggs' glove for an error that loaded the bases.

Schofield followed with a grounder into the hole that Owen grabbed and seemed ready to flip to third for a force, but was unable to get out of his glove and it went for an RBI single.
