Mississippi celebrates America's love affair with the teddy bear

ONWARD, Miss. (AP) — It's been 84 years since President Teddy Roosevelt refused to kill a captive bear in the Mississippi Delta, and a celebration is planned to commemorate the event that launched America's love affair with the teddy bear.

"There are a lot of people who care about this history," said Sandra Desmond of Greenville, organizer of the first Bear Hunt Reunion. "I'm thrilled that something like this is finally coming together."

The reunion will celebrate a legendary bear hunt that took place Nov. 14, 1902, on the banks of the Little Sunflower River in the Delta National Forest north of Vicksburg.

Roosevelt's guide, Holt Collier of Greenville, roped a 235-pound black bear for him, but the president refused to shoot a captive animal.

Word of Roosevelt's compassion and sportsmanship spread quickly and, two days later, Washington Post cartoonist Clifford Berryman illustrated the event and coined the teddy bear name.

According to legend, a Brooklyn, N.Y., couple began selling teddy bears after seeing the cartoon, and the rest is history.

But Mississippi has never officially celebrated its place in teddy bear lore.

Desmond, a transplanted Californian, decided to commemorate the event with what she hopes will become an annual trek to the Delta.

Activities during the weekend of Nov. 14-16 will be centered here at the Onward Store, where Mississippi-made teddies are sold and exhibits illustrate the great hunt.

The weekend will be kicked off with the unveiling of a historical marker, purchased with $900 in donations from businesses and private citizens, she said.

Elementary decline to be reversed

Pre-school enrollment sets record

WASHINGTON (AP) — Enrollment in kindergarten and nursery schools is at record levels as the number of births edges upward, a trend that Census Bureau officials say will shortly reverse the long-term decline in elementary school enrollment.

"In 1985 there were more children attending pre-primary school than ever before," including 2.5 million tots in nursery school and 3.8 million in kindergarten, the Census Bureau reported Tuesday.

"Parents are enrolling their children at earlier ages for the educational benefits," explained statistician Rosalind Bruno of the Census Bureau.

"Some people keep dismissing it as day care, but it isn't," added Bruno, author of the study. "The increase occurs among children of non-working mothers as much or more than among those of working mothers. And most nursery school is part-day, and that's not day care."

"The increase in kindergarten and nursery school enrollment in the 1980s because of increased population indicates an imminent reversal of the long-term trend of decline in elementary school enrollment," she wrote in the Bureau's annual report on school enrollment.

Enrollment in pre-schools has grown significantly since 1965, even in the face of the so-called Baby Bust, when birth rates declined sharply.

The low number of births in the 1960s and 1970s was balanced by a rapidly increasing share of children who were sent to nursery school and kindergarten.

And since 1980 an increase in the number of births has added to that trend, helping boost enrollment to the current record levels.

Thus, local systems which closed schools in the face of declining enrollments could be faced with a shortage of teachers and classrooms in the next few years.

The increase in births in recent years is not another Baby Boom, statisticians stress, since the birth rate has not increased. Instead, it is what they call an echo of the Baby Boom of the 1950s and 1960s, the result of all those children now moving into their own prime childbearing years.

The baby boomers can produce large numbers of offspring even at low birth rates simply because there are so many of them.

For example, last year there were a record 3,749,000 babies born in the United States, and in 1984 the number was 3,697,000, according to the National Center for Health Statistics. The fertility rate of 15.7 births per 1,000 people was the same for both years and well below the level of the 1950s.

The new Census study reports that kindergarten enrollment for 1985 showed a sharp jump, rising from 3.5 million in 1984 to 3.8 million. And "from 1980 to 1985, enrollment grew by one-half million students, or 17 percent, largely because the number of 5-year-olds grew," the report said.

California serial killer preying on transients

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A serial killer apparently has begun to prey late at night on drifters and other lone men on streets throughout the city in a fast-developing case that one detective says has victims "popping up all over the place."

Homicide detectives were trying to determine whether two more bodies found Monday — including the brother of All-Pro football great James Lofton — might be the work of the same person tentatively tied to nine other killings, police Lt. Dan Cooke said.

It is the second spate of serial killings to hit Los Angeles recently. The first killer, the so-called "Southside Slayer" who also remains at large, has been targeting prostitutes in south-central Los Angeles.

There is no apparent connection between the crime sprees which, together, have taken the lives of more than two dozen people, Cooke said.

One notable difference between the two serial killers is the rate of the deaths. The 17 Southside Slayer murders began just over three years ago and have been sporadic, with some killings separated by months of inactivity.

However, in the latest outbreak, the nine killings have all occurred in the past six weeks, beginning Sept. 4.

Lt. John Zorn, a 39-year-old detective who is in charge of both investigations, said, "Victims have started popping up all over the place. This is a case that's developing quickly."

While five of the victims in the latest series appear to be drifters, Cooke said four others, including a vacationer from Texas, cannot be classified as transients.

the turtles any more than necessary, Rayburn says. Kemp's ridley sea turtles are protected by the Endangered Species Act which provides that anyone taking, killing, injuring or harassing sea turtles is subject to arrest.

The penalty for violating the law is a five-year prison sentence and/or a $20,000 fine.

Last January, CEE, along with other conservation groups and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, asked NMFS and the Gulf of Mexico Fishery Management Council to make use of TEDs mandatory by early 1987.

CEE claims that voluntary use of TEDs has not been sufficient to counter the problem of the declining number of turtles.

However, because the Kemp's ridley sea turtle is listed as an endangered species, some shrimpers probably avoid dealing with

"In most cases, these educational programs have been successful," Rayburn says.

Rayburn says there is a certain amount of concern among shrimpers about saving the endangered sea turtles being caught. He says that over the past 10 years Texas shrimpers have been informed through educational programs of the proper methods of resuscitating turtles that accidentally are caught.
