Boston drubs New York again, takes 2-0 lead

NEW YORK (AP) — Dwight Evans and Dave Henderson hit home runs in Boston's 18-hit attack that spoiled the pitchers' duel that never was, and the Red Sox completed a sweep of the first two games of the World Series at New York by beating the Mets 9-3 Sunday night.

It was a matchup of two of the game's best pitchers, 24-game winner Roger Clemens of Boston and last year's National League Cy Young winner, Dwight Gooden of New York. But neither pitcher was around after five innings as the offenses took over, with Boston out-hitting the Mets 18-8.

The Red Sox, series underdogs, now take a 2-0 lead in games in the best-of-seven series back to Fenway Park in Boston, where the next three games are scheduled. Only Kansas City last year has ever lost the first two games at home and come back to win the series.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd, 16-10 during the season, was scheduled to face former Red Sox pitcher Bob Ojeda, 18-5, a left-hander, in Game 3 Tuesday night.

Henderson, the hero of Boston's Game 5 playoff victory with a ninth-inning homer, hit a solo homer in the fourth inning off Gooden, and Evans hit a two-run shot in Gooden's last inning, the fifth, as the Red Sox took a 6-2 lead. The Red Sox scored two more runs in the seventh on five consecutive singles off Rick Aguilera to put the game away. Wade Boggs' RBI double in the ninth ended the scoring.

Boston's 18 hits were two hits shy of the World Series single-game record set by the New York Giants in 1921 and St. Louis Cardinals in 1946.

Clemens, who failed to go five innings only twice this season, was knocked out of the game in the fifth after giving up three runs on five hits in his third straight outing on three-days rest.

The Mets, who hit just .189 in the playoffs, were held to four hits in losing the first game 1-0, and Manager Dave Johnson benched regulars Ray Knight and Mookie Wilson in favor of Howard Johnson and Danny Heep to try to get more offense. Johnson and Heep went a combined 0-for-6.

The Red Sox scored three of their runs in the third off Gooden, aided by a rare throwing error by Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez. The Mets scored twice in the fourth off Gooden, including a two-run homer by Hernandez and two on, then chased Gooden with a run in the fifth.

The 4½-inning outing was the shortest of the season for Gooden except for a 1½-inning start in Game 1 when he was hit by a line drive by John Stefero of Baltimore and ejected from a game on Oct. 18 in Chicago after 4½ innings. Gooden, who set a major-league record striking out 20 batters in a game April 29 against Seattle, walked three and walked four.

Relievers Steve Crawford and Stanley shut out the Mets in the final 4½ innings.

'Boys of summer' brace for cold

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball, the Summer Game, at World Series time.

Fans bundled in parkas. Umpires wearing thick gloves. Infielders blowing on their hands, trying to get warm.

"We might as well get used to it," New York Mets second baseman Wally Backman said. "It's not going to get any warmer."

Remember that romantic vision of the World Series, kids skipping school and businessmen taking the day off, just to watch a ballgame on a cool fall afternoon?

Forget it. Those days are gone. The World Series is now downright cold.

Maybe it was fitting that actress Glenn Close, star of the movie "The Big Chill," sang the National Anthem prior to Game 1 Saturday night. The temperature was 51 degrees, stirred by a 9 mph wind.

"You might not notice it as much because you're in a World Series," Boston outfielder Dwight Evans said. "But if that had been a regular season game against Cleveland or somebody, you'd be freezing."

With the start of baseball's billion-dollar television package last year, all World Series games now start at night.

Baseball and TV executives say that means more people can see them. Sounds like a good idea, except for the people who have to play the game and those who pay to watch.

"It got pretty cold out there," Red Sox shortstop Spike Owen said after a 1-0 victory in Game 1.

Coffee and hot chocolate vendors did a brisk business. Beer and soda hawkers had a tough time making a sale.

Umpire Harry Wendtstedt and Boston Manager John McNamara wore gloves. So did most of the fans, who sat in virtual silence — because they were sitting on their hands to keep them warm. The weather was so much the Red Sox's enemy that the crowd out of the action.

It was the first 1-0 game in World Series since 1972, and on both teams said the cold weather has been a factor.

"You just don't feel as good as there," bandaged Boston pitcher Bill Buckner said. "Once you get moving you get a little better," Mets pitcher Tom Seaver said.

Of course, the weather have been a moot point of the series since 1972, and if Houston had held the Mets in the league playoffs.

Temperatures during the game in California were in the 40s and 50s, and in Houston, the temperature was in the 40s and 50s.

Football has a scheduling problem. The Super Bowl is played every year in either a warm site or a place that has a warm climate.

Baseball, with its tradition of playing in cold weather, would never go for that.
