Women's tennis team heads for Rice meet

The Texas A&M women's tennis team, or what's left of it, will be in action this weekend at the Rice Invitational in Houston.

Since most of the team is out with injuries, only three players will represent A&M in the tournament: Laura Liong, Missy Kibler and Cindy Crawford.

Kim Labuschagne, the Aggies' top player, is out with a groin injury, Gaye Lynne Gensler is suffering from ligament damage from a twisted knee, Jennifer Jones is recovering from mononucleosis, and Kellie Dorman has a pulled stomach muscle.

NCAA, SWC to appeal ruling

AUSTIN (AP) — The NCAA, joined by the Southwest Conference, will appeal a ruling by an Austin federal judge that certain information on recruiting violations should be made public, according to SWC Commissioner Fred Jacoby and an NCAA lawyer.

U.S. District Judge James Nowlin ruled Tuesday that the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the SWC must release their files on completed investigations of coaches, alumni and "boosters" and "informers."

The judge said the privacy of students and their families would be protected.

Jacoby said, "The NCAA will appeal it and the conference will appeal the appeal. We receive no state monies, no public funds or money from the Legislature. The NCAA will file it, I assume, within 30 days."

Kansas City lawyer Robert M. were, who represents the NCAA, confirmed that an appeal would be filed.

Holmes decides to hang up gloves

NEW YORK (AP) — Larry Holmes announced his retirement from boxing Thursday three days after he turned 37.

It was the second time the former heavyweight champion has announced his retirement, but this time he said it will stick.

Following a news conference at Larry Holmes' Commodore Inn outside Phillipsburg, N.J., Holmes told The Associated Press in a telephone interview:

"I'm tired of fighting and I'm tired of not getting the decisions I earned. I got old, too."

Holmes first said he would retire after fighting David Bey on March 15, 1985. He stopped Bey in the 10th round to make his record 47-0, but then Holmes fought and outpointed Carl Williams.

Then on Sept. 15, 1985 he defended the International Boxing Federation title against light heavyweight champion Michael Spinks and lost. In a rematch, Holmes lost again in 15 rounds.

On June 9, 1978, Holmes won the World Boxing Council title, which he defended 17 times before he relinquished it in December, 1983, rather than fight Greg Page. Recognized as champion by the IBF, Holmes defended that title four times before losing to Spinks.

In a fine career, which was overshadowed by Muhammad Ali, who preceded him as the world's premier heavyweight, Holmes considers the highlights "winning the title, then fighting Gerry Cooney."

In an atmosphere of rancor, with charges of racism on both sides, Holmes stopped Cooney in the 13th round June 11, 1982. The previously unbeaten Cooney was given an excellent chance of becoming the first white heavyweight champion since Ingemar Johansson in 1959-60.

As for regrets, Holmes said he didn't want to fight Muhammad Ali because he was my brother.

On Oct. 2, 1980, Holmes boxed when a badly faded "The Great" failed to answer the bell for the round.

Holmes also said he regretted things I said about Rocky Marciano. After losing the IBF title to Spinks and failing to match the late Marciano's record, Holmes snapped news conference, "Rocky Marciano couldn't carry my jock."

"I should have said it differently but I was mad," Holmes said.
