Educational Psychology 101: Improvement of Learning, two credits.

This class teaches good study habits, how to use campus resources like the library, and how to adjust to college life. Unfortunately, the course description doesn't mention how to handle the real tough subjects at college: Fake IDs 105 and Creative Excuses for Missed Tests 301.

As you may expect, the enrollment for this class is limited to freshmen. However, if it looks like you'll pull a GPR below 1.0 this semester (don't worry — it's been done many times before), your adviser may let that requirement slide.

If you attend class, making the grade in EPSY 101 seems to be a sure thing. About 85 percent of the students make A's; 12 percent make F's.

Finance 201: Personal Finance, three credits.

Just because you know how to balance your checkbook doesn't mean you know everything about personal finance. Do you know how points affect the price of a house? How much do you know about the stock market? One of these days, you'll get out of school and face the wide world of taxes and insurance and retirement plans.

Although the folks we asked seemed to think this is an easy A, the statistics indicate otherwise. Only 15 percent of the Finance 201 students made A's. On the other end, only four percent made F's, so it's probably an easy C.

Health Education 216: First Aid, two credits.

Eviscerated organs! Vomiting! Blood, guts, gore and more! Oh boy! It's First Aid!

If you have a weak stomach and can't stand the sight of fake blood, stay away from this class. However, if you'd like to be prepared for an emergency situation, First Aid offers a solid foundation in CPR, wrapping wounds and splinting broken arms. If you pass this course (most people do), you'll get Red Cross certifications in CPR and first aid.

Health Education 342: Human Sexuality, three credits.

Everything you ever wanted to know about sex but were afraid to ask. But you better ask, because people saunter into this class with a smirk and an "I know everything there is to know" attitude and then proceed to make a B or C.

A word of advice: if you
