Court closes school, keeps pastor out of jail

AUSTIN (AP) — A state district court approved late Monday an agreement between the Rep. W.N. Otwell that will keep him out of jail but prevent him from operating a children's home without a license.

Otwell, who fled the state five weeks ago to escape a contempt of court order, surrendered Monday and was brought to Austin.

"I appreciate the judge not incarcerating me," Otwell said after the brief court hearing. "I still think the law is wrong and will try to get it changed in the next Legislature."

"I think they made the right decision to close the school and go to the Legislature," said Attorney General Jim Mattox, who appeared before District Judge Paul Davis.

Otwell contends that getting a state license for the Tarrant County home would violate the separation of church and state guarantees in the Constitution.

Davis ruled after Mattox and Shelby Sharp, Otwell's attorney, said an agreement had been reached.

Otwell and the Community Baptist Church, which he heads, agreed not to operate the school for troubled boys until, and unless, the Legislature changes state laws that require state licensing of all church schools that care for minor children.

Davis approved the agreement prohibiting operation of the school.

He also agreed to suspend payment of $67,000 in fines levied against Otwell and the church.

"That includes a waiver of any possible jail sentence," he said, referring to the contempt of court action.

But he lectured Otwell sternly.

"You took it upon yourself to decide whether to follow a law," Davis said. "That is a very unfortunate message you have given a lot of people."

Otwell said he was serious at all times in his actions.

"I wasn't playing games," he said. "We felt the courts and the state had been unjust to us."

Otwell surrendered to Tarrant County Sheriff Don Carpenter at Forest Hill.

"We just looked at some options and God gave me some peace," Otwell told a news conference there. "I was very uneasy about coming back to Texas, but I was satisfied that's what God wanted."
