Clements' plan to sell jet could be grounded

(AP) — Gov.-elect Bill Clements wants to sell the $3.1 million jet purchased three years ago at Gov. Mark White's urging, but the eight-passenger plane is not Clements' to sell.

The Mitsubishi Diamond 1A, like the 42 other aircraft in the state fleet, is owned by the state's Aircraft Pooling Board, which leases it to White's office.

Board chairman Don Adams, an Austin lawyer, said it's doubtful the board will vote to sell the jet because the state probably would lose money. "We'll put it in the fleet before we'll give it away," Adams said.

During the recent campaign, Clements pledged to sell the jet "as soon as my hand comes off the Bible" at his Jan. 20 inauguration.

Clements called the plane a symbol of White's free-spending style of government.

But Adams said Clements would have to make a good economic case for selling the plane before the board would approve it. The three-member board includes members selected by the governor, lieutenant governor and the House speaker.

If the board goes along with Clements' idea, the airplane first would be offered for sale to other state agencies. If there are no takers after 30 days, local governmental agencies around the state would get a crack at it.

If there were still no takers, the plane would be advertised for sale to the public by sealed bid.

The same jet now sells for $3.4 million new. Used models sell for about $1.5 million. Adams estimated the governor's Diamond would bring about $1 million on the open market.

White and others have said the Diamond costs less to fly than the plane it replaced, which the governor said was outdated. White also said the new plane was much safer than the older one.
