depends on the amount of services stolen, he says. Both the College Station and Bryan police departments report no recent arrests for telephone fraud, but Polson says that MCI is working with College Station police on several cases. College Station police declined comment on the matter.

Bob Wiatt, director of security and traffic at A&M, says the University Police Department has gotten involved in several of the telephone fraud cases involving campus residents. "Our department is investigating a number of these incidents, and while no arrests have been made to date, at least one is pending," Wiatt says.

He says that while University Police have cooperated with long-distance services before on similar cases, the relationship has not always been a pleasant one for the A&M police.

"In the past there have been numerous incidents that we have been investigating on behalf of the phone companies," he says. "The result has always been that when it came down to the identification of the student, the phone company decided to accept restitution from the individual and drop the charges."

"Well, at this point, my policy is that we are not going to be put in the position of a collection agency. If they come to us stating that a criminal act is evident, and we investigate it, then we are going to take the matter to the district attorney."

"So now when we investigate, it is with the purpose of eventually filing charges."

One source, who did not wish to be identified, was recently caught by University Communications for making illegal calls. He says his problem stemmed from not thinking before making the calls.

"If I'd known that it was illegal as it was, God knows I'd never have done it," he says.

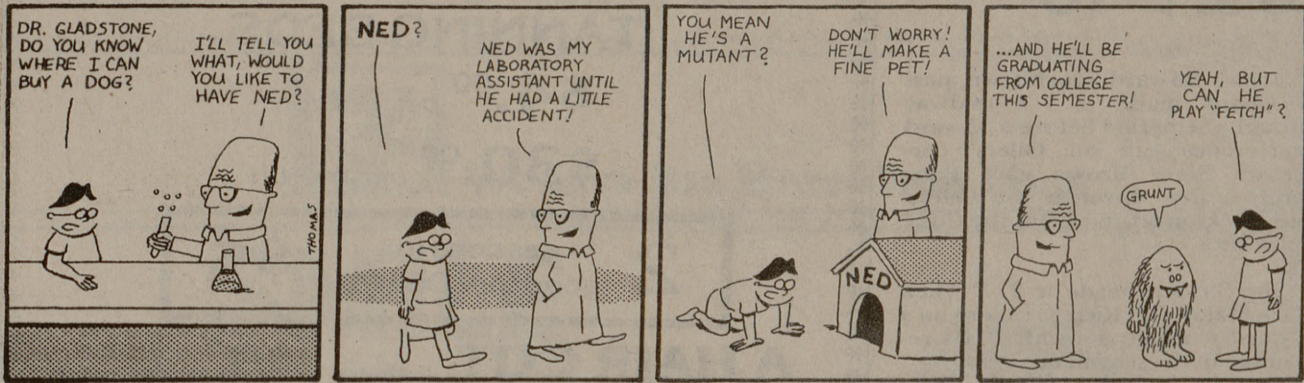

Since the service used in this case was University Communications, no arrest was made, but the source admitted the situation was embarrassing, and that things could have turned out much worse.

But the potential of actually getting caught was never considered, he says.

"I didn't make that many calls, yet I got caught," he says. "If this can happen to me, if I can get caught making just a few calls, then I think people need to think about whether this is really a good idea."

Spouse search service finds mates for upwardly mobile

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — "My client is a marriage-minded Harvard MBA. He is successful, intelligent, attractive and popular. If you are 30-35, slim and fit, well-educated (and) your interests include informal dinner parties, good conversation ... write to me."

The ad was run by Zelda Fischer, founder of an upwardly mobile spouse search agency called Gentlepeople Ltd., which doesn't accept business from just anyone.

"I don't find the word 'snob' offensive," she says. But she'd prefer describing her clients as fussy.

"I wouldn't turn away an intellectually curious tradesperson," says Fischer, who screens prospective clients by telephone.

"A plumber is fine if he's comfortable exchanging ideas or enjoying music with other bright, civilized people," she says.

Gentlepeople seeks to match the achievers and the successful, the sort who enliven dinner party conversation and drive home in expensive sports cars. "Money is very important in all this," she says.

The firm charges a $2,500 fee.

"I think it's high, but not too high," said one client, a 45-year-old who declined to give her name. "It's a terrible thing to say, but perhaps the fee sorts the wheat from the chaff."

"A lot of us are very busy people," added the woman, who for eight months has been dating a 57-year-old entrepreneur introduced by Gentlepeople. "I have an accountant who takes care of my taxes, doctors who take care of my body and I have someone who takes care of my social life — Zelda — and it's wonderful."

As hefty as the fee is, it's soon going up to $5,000, Fischer says, because more matches are being arranged through her recently opened London office and this raises costs. The charge covers six months of introductions and informal evenings with all current "members."

To determine the sort of person a caller is, Fischer, 59, might ask whether his favorite comedian is Joan Rivers or Woody Allen.

The Cambridge office has about 150 active clients. About 30 percent of the clients end up marrying mates selected by Gentlepeople, Fischer says, adding that none of the matches has ended in divorce "but I've been in business only five years."

She recalls one case in which two people she introduced tried to get their money back because the man proposed on the first date.

But, of course, Gentlepeople doesn't make refunds in such cases.
