U.S. prison camps to be re-evaluated by Supreme Court

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, 42 years after it condoned the government's mass detention of Japanese-Americans in World War II prison camps, said Monday it will re-examine that episode in American history.

The court agreed to study a Reagan administration attempt to kill a lawsuit stemming from the government's taking 120,000 U.S. citizens and resident aliens from their homes and placing them in the camps.

Japanese-Americans said they were disappointed, but not surprised, by the court's action.

A federal appeals court had said the government must defend itself at trial against claims for compensation of property losses suffered by those interned. The losses are estimated in the billions of dollars.

In other matters Monday, the court:

• Limited the rights of employees to win paid leaves of absence for special religious holidays by ruling 8-1 in a Connecticut case that employers need not accommodate all of a worker's religious demands.

The court said granting an employee unpaid leave for religious holidays generally is adequate unless paid leave is provided for all purposes except absences for religious observances.

• Refused to allow the display of an illuminated cross above the St. Charles, Ill., firehouse during the Christmas season. The justices let stand a ruling that the display is an impermissible government endorsement of Christianity.

• Agreed in a Pennsylvania case to consider making it more difficult for women to win paternity lawsuits against the men they say fathered their children.

The internment case has its roots in the wake of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941. The federal government forcibly removed from their homes citizens and resident aliens living in California and parts of Arizona, Oregon and Washington.

Some spent as long as four years in the camps.

Gramm to introduce law to help employers verify workers' I.D.s

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Phil Gramm said Monday he would introduce legislation to help employers avoid hiring illegal aliens in order to protect businesses from being punished unfairly under the new immigration reform law.

Gramm said he planned an amendment to the law calling for creation of a telephone system to verify the validity of new "tamperproof" Social Security cards.

The system would serve as insurance for employers who will face criminal and civil penalties for hiring illegal aliens as of May 1 under the immigration bill signed by President Reagan on Nov. 6, said Gramm, R-Texas.

"As of now we really have no effective means to try to help employers who are trying to comply with the law and not hire illegal aliens," Gramm said in a news conference.

"We have no effective measure to enable people to identify themselves. And I am deeply concerned that unless something is done quickly, that ... we're going to have a lot of employers who are going to be in violation of the law," Gramm said.

Gramm unveiled his solutions in the form of an amendment called the Immigration Fairness In Reform Amendment Number One, which laid out four specific provisions he said are aimed at making the law more practical.

The first provision would establish a telephone system an employer could use to verify the legal status of any worker he was considering hiring, "just as the authenticity of a credit card can be verified at a retail store," Gramm said.

Gramm gave no indication of how much it would cost to create such a computer verification system, but said the Social Security Administration is currently working out details.

Employers would be charged $1.50 to $2 per call when using the system, Gramm said.

Secondly, Gramm's proposal would require the Social Security Administration to create a new tamperproof card within a year in an effort to eliminate counterfeit cards.

"The amendment requires that this card be made available at cost to any person who either applies for a new card" or has an old one, Gramm said. "According to the Social Security Administration, this card cannot be counterfeited."

He displayed a sample card printed on blue paper similar to that used to make currency, but with raised lettering.

The cost of making such a card is $12, but could drop to as little as $1 if it became widely used, Gramm said.

Rumor-based trading decreasing after case

NEW YORK (AP) — The Ivan Boesky insider-trading case will reduce stock trading based on takeover rumors but is unlikely to dampen takeover activity in general, merger specialists predicted Monday.

Some Wall Streeters said takeover speculation, which had been accelerating before Boesky's case was disclosed Friday, immediately dropped off along with overall trading volume when investors returned to the market Monday.

Boesky, who agreed to pay a record $100 million penalty to settle government charges that he engaged in illegal insider trading, was the most successful and famous of Wall Street's risk arbiters, or professional takeover speculators.

Many arbiters spend huge sums investing in stocks involved in takeover situations that have been publicly disclosed. They generally hope to buy the shares for less than what the acquirer ultimately pays for the stock when the merger is completed.

Some arbiters, however, also invest in stocks that are only rumored to be takeover targets. And that often fuels heavy trading in the stocks before any public announcement of a takeover bid is made.

There is nothing illegal about that, provided the arbitrageur does not trade on the basis of confidential information not yet made available to the general public — which Boesky was charged with doing.

Yet Boesky's downfall will make all arbiters and other professional investors wary of heeding unconfirmed speculation and investing on the basis of rumors, hunches or legitimate information lest they give even the appearance of using improperly obtained inside data, merger experts said.

Robert S. Pirie, president of Rothschild Inc., an investment firm that specializes in advising clients on takeover strategies, predicted, "There will be, at least for some time period, a significant falling off in the rumor mill."

Arbitrators and others "are going to think twice about calling everyone in America trying to find out whether it (a rumor) is true," he said.

Kenneth Bialkin, a takeover attorney at the law firm Willkie, Farr & Gallagher, said: "There is undoubtedly going to be that fear because you don't know if the one you talk to is a tainted source. And the sources will be much more careful about what they say and to whom."

Hostage

14, 1985, after 18 months in captivity. Jenco, 50, also held 18 months, was freed last July 26. Jacobsen, 54, held 17 months, was freed Nov. 2.

Two other Americans held with them, Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, and Thomas Sutherland, a university administrator, are still being held.

The former hostages who met with Waite said they hoped they were not exchanged for arms and had to believe Reagan's assurances that there was no deal.

Weir said he would be "deeply disturbed" if he found "that my release had been contingent on what might appear to be a further escalation of the conflict between Iran and Iraq."
