Opinion

The Battalion

(USPS 045 360)

Member of Texas Press Association Southwest Journalism Conference

The Battalion Editorial Board

Cathie Anderson, Editor Kirsten Dietz, Managing Editor Loren Steffy, Opinion Page Editor Frank Smith, City Editor Sue Krenek, News Editor Ken Sury, Sports Editor

quest.
Our address: The Battalion, 216 Reed McDonald Building, Texas A&M University, College Station, TX 77843.
Second class postage paid at College Station, TX 77843.
POSTMASTER: Send address changes to The Battalion, 216 Reed McDonald, Texas A&M University, College Station TX 77843.

Why just English?

The State Republican Executive Committee's proposed constitutional amendment proclaiming English as the official language of Texas is a superfluous attempt to state the obvious. The best we can hope for is that the proposal is ignored. It probably will unnecessarily agitate the Hispanic community and could inhibit public education of minorities.

The last thing the amendment-laden Texas Constitution needs is another highly specialized, meaningless provision tacked on to it. The last thing Texas taxpayers need is the expense of funding the amendment process one more time. The last thing Texas lawmakers need to be concerned with is what language is being spoken where. In lieu of the recent budget crunches, legislators need to focus on more pertinent economic matters.

But what would declaring English the official state language accomplish? It makes about as much sense as an amendment to the U.S. Constitution declaring apple pie the official national dessert. Those who prefer speaking English will continue to do so, and those who feel more confortable using a different tongue are unlikely to change, amendment or not.

We could, of course, use the amendment to revert to the pre-bilingual education days when students were forbidden to speak anything other than English on school grounds. However, that would accomplish nothing other than denying the benefits of public education to students not yet fluent in English.

The amendment also could be used to prevent voting ballots and official documents from being printed in both English and Spanish. The committee claims this would cut down on printing costs. It also would deprive many Hispanics of their voting privileges.

All of these ramifications of the proposed amendment amount to little more than discrimination against non-English-speaking Americans — specifically Hispanics.

So English would be our official language. Big deal. A quick flip trol the military? through the encyclopedia reveals essentially the same thing without going through the amendment process. Those who aren't fluent in English are painfully aware of their handicap. Although old languages may die hard, cultural assimilation — the sheer necessity of knowing English to live in the United States — wins out. That's the point of bilingual education — to help students become comfortable with English, thereby making the assimilation process easier.

The proposal is the epitome of bureaucratic pomp without purpose. The amendment, if actually submitted, wouldn't be worth the paper it was printed on, even if the self-appointed guardians of English attempted to save money by having it printed in only one lan-

Puff, the tragic drag

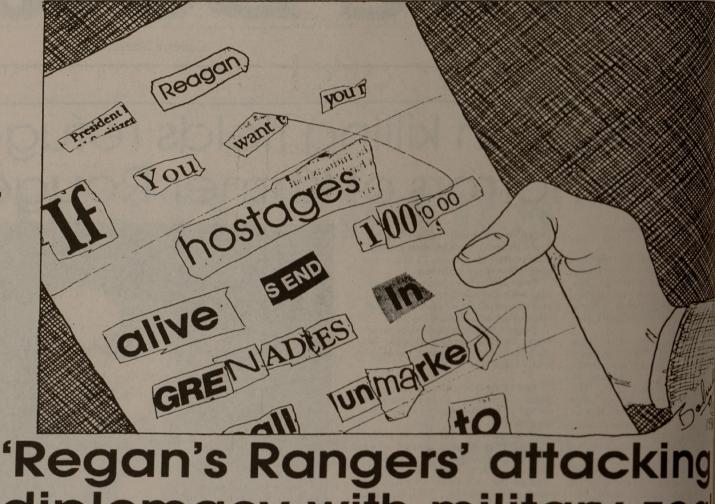

The dangers of cigarette smoking are no secret — lung cancer, mouth cancer, pharynx cancer, esophagus cancer, bladder cancer, pancreas cancer, laryngeal cancer, emphysema and ultimately death all have been linked to it. Thursday is the American Cancer Society's 10th annual Great American Smokeout, when members of America's dwindling smoking minority are encouraged to lay down their cancer sticks and breathe freely for 24 hours.

Scare tactics and statistics have little effect on diehard smoking addicts. The lure of a nicotine-tainted puff outweighs the threat of a slow and painful death. But recent studies have found that secondhand smokers — those who must inhale the inconsiderate runoff of the smoker's habit — also run a high risk of getting cancer.

Overcoming an addiction is never easy. ACS says that if one in five smokers kick the habit during the smokeout, the project will be a success. The first step, of course, it trying to quit. Determination is the strongest weapon against addiction. No anti-smoking campaign can be successful unless the smoker is as committed to the internal, personal struggle as ACS is to the national one.

If you smoke, please try puffing clean air Thursday. If you're lucky, you might develop an addiction for it rather than tar and nicotine. If you can't stop, keep trying. Remember, diehard smokers may find dying a lot easier than they thought.

diplomacy with military zed

Every time Soviet radio switches to classical music and a new leader is installed in the Kremlin, the oped pages of U.S. newspapers sprout with essays by Soviet specialists wondering if the new boy will be able to control the military

Richard Cohen

Without indulging ourselves in Beethoven or anything, the time has come for us to ask the same question about our leader, Ronald Reagan. Can he con-

The answer seems to be no. His National Security Council seems to be an outpost of the military, headed by an admiral, John Poindexter, who succeeded a colonel, Robert McFarlane. Next in charge when it comes to derring-do is a lieutenant colonel, Oliver North, Jr., who is the Errol Flynn of the operation, and above them all is that ex-Marine by way of Merril Lynch, Donald Regan.

What they all lack in foreign policy experience, they make up in chutzpah. Show them a foreign policy dilemma and they'll mistake it for a beach.

The most recent beach hit is, of Iran. In contravention of U.S. policy, Regan's Rangers proved that (1) we would bargain for the release of American hostages and (2) we are not neutral in the Iran-Iraq war. With the gress was kept in the dark; the State Decooperation of the Israelis, Regan's Rangers have shipped arms to the Iranians, managing, it seems, to secure the freedom of three hostages and, in the curity director, McFarlane, were dis- Copyright 1986, Washington Post Writers process, putting in peril all Americans who happen to be in the Middle East. patched on secret missions that we who happen to be in the Middle East.

As for U.S. credibility, it just no operaton relied on the willingness longer exists. What we vowed we would the factions in Iran to keep mun not do, we simply did.

Ronald Reagan himself always has had a weakness for the simple, the cinematic. He likes the bold stroke. He sees the world with a kind of charming simplicity and in this he has been indulged. The invasion of Grenada, a kind of of sandlot war, was greeted as so stunning a success it reinforced the president's tendency to ask the calvalry to do what diplomats should.

The Iran operation is a case in point. It promised results, it was bold, it was secret and - maybe best of all - if it worked it would bring home the hostages just before the congressional elections. So the plan, once dormant, was brought back to life.

But what now? The credibility of the United States is in shreds. As with the Daniloff affair, we said we would not bargain - and then we did. Throughout the Middle East, terrorists now know the unit price of an American. He or she is worth a shipload of tank and artillery ammunition, some rifles, a cake in the shape of a key and a Bible. The actual goods are probably subject to bargaining, but not the principle involved. We will deal.

As in Watergate, a president has es- that Regan's Rangers did not ablished an entire apparatus to do his themsely personal bidding. The normal agencies for the promulgation and execution of foreign policy have been bypassed. Conpartment was told to butt out; the CIA was shunned.

Col. North and a former National Se-silly as they were exciting. Afteral dictably, one did not. It hardly takes a conspiracy the to suggest that Regan's Ranges also responsible for keeping the a in Nicaragua armed in the manne which they had become accuston ter Congress had ordered otherwise do this, they turned to a network mer military men of commendable communist zeal to do what the government ment could not. It raised the mo bought the arms - and continued that Congress wanted closed down. the A-Team, Regan's Rangers have patience with laws that make no sens

All of Congress is now in the ha Democrats, including the Senate. the talk shows, its leaders issued quired growls, asserting that they look into this or that. By January, Congress convenes, there will undo edly be new polls certifying the p dent's popularity and, if the pastiguide, the Democrats will turn the tention to trade and the public hang of drug dealers. The formulation execution of foreign policy by about of movie-stricken presidential aides be forgotten. But it should not be. The likelihou that their activities have been as bo less as their imagination — and m illegal to boot.

If, as Regan's Rangers seem to the real life is like a movie, Congress to respond in kind. I suggest "A President's Men.'

Mail Call

What about the child?

I reacted strongly when I read Paul Koch's letter in Friday's Battalion. Although AIDS is stigmatized as being "the gay plague," the virus is now known to be carried by more than two million people, homosexual as well as I was struck by the phrase "almost every case was so easily preventable." The key word there is "almost." As most people know, AIDS can be passed by blood transfusions as well as sexual contact. What about the child who is inadvertently given a pint of blood infected with the AIDS virus? Tests are not infallible. Do we condemn this child to death because we disagree with others' lifestyles?

I am happy to see my tax money used to combat such a terrifying virus as AIDS and any other life-threatening dis-

John P. Davis '89

'Innocents' also at risk

I cannot believe the naivete and misperception expressed in Paul Koch's letter in Friday's Battalion. Koch said that he could not feel sympathetic toward AIDS victims because they "play wih fire" and deserve to "get burned." He also said that the way to prevent contraction of AIDS was to practice "restraint" before marriage and Well, what about the woman on the CBS News special, "AIDS Hits Home," who always had been faithful to her husband, yet she contracted AIDS because he was having an affair with another man? Or how about someone who is married to an intravenous-drug user? If that's not enough, how about the infant whose mother has AIDS or the hemophiliac who must depend on a possibly contaminated blood-clotting factor drawn from an anonymous donor?

These people cannot make any behavioral decisions reduce their risk. They are innocent. Can we just stand around and watch them die simply because the moralist the world feel that AIDS is Mother Nature's revenge against homosexuality and promiscuity? The AIDS epidemic confronts us wth our own sexual insecurities and vulnerabilities, and we must each deal wi that in our own way. But our humanity alone must make care and love our first priorities.

Vanessa Paulley '89

Where does the money go?

Over the past three years I have trusted the Memoria Student Center Bookstore as a good cause and assumed one had better prices. But this semester I was gravely disappointed. I found one of my books selling along University Drive for $26 to $29 — MSC price: $45!

Where does our money go? I want to know how the MSC "distributes" its money. It claims to be nonprofit, would seem it must produce a huge amount of funds. A auctions and other special events add to the income.

However, as student organization treasurers painful have discovered, the percent of money distributed that is needed by organizations this year is way down, around to 15 percent of full budget. Try running a club on a 90

I hope someone at the MSC takes a look at this situation and gives us some answers.

Paul Svacina '87

Editor's Note: Bookstore Manager Howard DeHart SI except for operating costs, all money from the bookstore channeled back to student organizations.

Letters to the editor should not exceed 300 words in length. The editor staff reserves the right to edit letters for style and length, but will make every effort to maintain the author's intent. Each letter must be sign and must include the classification, address and telephone number of