3-week strike collapses at GM South Africa plant

PORT ELIZABETH, South Africa (AP) — A three-week strike at General Motors collapsed Tuesday as workers streamed back after an ultimatum to return or be fired.

The company said just 219 strikers failed to come back by the 9 a.m. deadline announced Monday.

An additional 566 strikers were fired early in the walkout for staging a sit-in at the plant.

The 1,800 strikers made up most of the main plant's 2,200 hourly paid workers. Production came to a virtual halt despite the efforts of GM's 1,000 non-striking white-collar and clerical workers.

GM said those dismissed for the sit-in could reapply, except for strikers involved in violence. About 350 of the 566 already asked to return, said Robert McIlwaine, director of industrial relations.

The GM strike began over worker demands for money guarantees and a say in the new local management after the American parent company decided to sell its South African operation. The sale resulted from depressed auto sales and pressure from U.S. anti-apartheid groups to pull out of South Africa.

On Monday, police used rubber whips and dogs to break up a crowd of about 350 strikers trying to block others from going back to work. Sixteen strikers were arrested.

About one-third of the strikers had drifted back to work by Monday. Facing the 9 a.m. ultimatum, most workers streamed into the plant Tuesday morning.

Freddie Sauls, general secretary of the National Automobile and Allied Workers Union, said, "Definitely, the strike has been effectively broken."

The union first said that it was a wildcat strike, illegal and not sanctioned by the union, but Sauls later said he endorsed worker demands.

GM said it would negotiate on demands only when the strike ended.

Port Elizabeth is the nation's most depressed city. It has been hard hit by unrest in black townships and a black consumer boycott of white shops. Black unemployment is estimated at more than 50 percent.

Most of the skilled GM workers are of mixed race and are plagued by unemployment but are less organized politically than the blacks.

Apartheid, by law and custom, establishes a racially segregated society in which the 24 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

Computer halts first shuttle test since disaster of Challenger flight

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Five astronauts boarded a space shuttle Tuesday for the first time since the Challenger disaster, but the mock countdown aboard Atlantis was halted 25 seconds short of the simulated engine firing by problems with computer software.

Several other troubles also cropped up during the simulation that might have halted a real launch.

But NASA spokesman Jim Ball said officials considered the test successful because it accomplished its main goal: maintaining launch team sharpness during the long flightless period following the Challenger explosion.

The Atlantis simulation was primarily a test of the launch crews and not of the shuttle, Ball said. The simulation met all of its objectives, he said.

Robert Gibson, who commanded the astronaut crew aboard Atlantis, said the simulation was a good test.

He said it was "a real morale booster for the launch team. The fact that we had problems made it more realistic."

Gibson said it was "difficult to look at the launch pad and the orbiter without flashbacks (to the Challenger accident)."

"I don't think we'll ever get over it," he said. "But I decided a long time ago I'm going to fly again."

Gibson volunteered his crew to take the first trip when shuttle flights resume.

The crew that boarded Atlantis on Tuesday is the same one that flew the last successful shuttle flight, that of Columbia, which ended just 10 days before Challenger exploded Jan. 28, killing the seven crew members.

The three remaining shuttles have been grounded, and will remain grounded for at least an additional 15 months while engineers redesign the faulty booster rocket joint that caused the accident.

Most of Tuesday's problems were associated with work-around procedures developed because of the condition Atlantis is in, minus many of its components. The software that halted the count, for example, was written specifically because the three main engines are missing and it would not have been used during an actual countdown, Ball said.

Average kid's allowance is $3.34 per week

NEW YORK (AP) — The average American child gets an allowance of $3.34 a week, with 5-year-olds starting at $1.40 and 16-year-olds taking in a sweet $8.13, according to a survey of families with working mothers.

Nine out of 10 parents give their children allowances, and 70 percent of them expect something like a clean room or a good report card in return, Working Mother magazine reports in its December issue.

But Blake Rosenthal, 10, of Fort Lee, N.J., grouched, "I think I'm getting gypped." She receives $3 a week, 15 cents less than the national average for those her age.

According to the survey, 65 percent of parents who give allowances are happy with the way they are spent; more than half impose no restrictions.

The survey also showed:

- Most kids started getting their allowance when they were about 6½, and more than three-quarters had one by age 8.
- Boys were asked to do more chores than girls — and more often disappointed their parents with their performance. Boys got more than girls to start, but at age 12 girls took the lead and held it through the teen ages.
- Family income had relatively little bearing on children's allowances. "At each age level there is rarely more than 50 cents to $1 difference between what the poorest and richest households allot," the magazine reports.

But parents with lower incomes, the survey found, expect more from their children.

Seventy-four percent of kids spent some or all their money on toys. Other expenses for allowances go include food (43 percent), gifts (39 percent), comics, magazines and books (38 percent), clothes, video games and records (34 percent), and jewelry (31 percent), school supplies (25 percent) and savings (15 percent).

Only 4 percent bought candy, a substance which previous generations of children were accused of squandering their allowances.

The survey is based on 961 responses to questionnaires placed in the July issue of Working Mother. Seventy-three percent of those who responded were married, 23 percent were separated or divorced, 3 percent never married and 1 percent were widowed. Those surveyed were 1,043 children between the ages of 5 and 16.
