U.S. economy rebounds with car sales, defense

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's economy, bolstered by a boom in car sales and hefty defense spending, grew at a respectable 2.9 percent annual rate last summer, substantially better than the dismal performance during the spring, the government reported Wednesday.

While the Reagan administration hailed the increase as proof that the long-awaited rebound in economic growth is under way, private economists expressed fears that the strength could be short-lived.

The Commerce Department reported that the gross national product, after adjusting for inflation, expanded from July through September at a 2.9 percent pace, up substantially from a barely discernible 0.6 percent growth rate turned in from April through June.

The estimate of third-quarter GNP growth marked an upward revision from an initial report last month that put growth at a 2.4 percent rate.

The faster growth was accompanied by higher inflation as the beneficial effects of plunging oil prices wore off. Prices, as measured by a GNP inflation index, rose at an annual rate of 2.4 percent compared with 1.7 percent in the second quarter.

In other economic news Wednesday, the government reported:

• Construction of new homes and apartments edged down 0.2 percent to an annual rate of 1.65 million units. It was the fifth decline in the past six months and put the annual construction rate at its lowest level since February 1985. The decline came from weakness in apartment building, and analysts said this is likely to remain sluggish because of overbuilding and negative effects of the new tax law.

• Corporate profits climbed 4.5 percent in the third quarter, their strongest gain in 18 months. Profits rose 4.5 percent in the final months of 1985. Industries that reported gains included chemicals, food, while petroleum and manufacturers of durable goods suffered declining profits.

Commenting on the GNP report, presidential spokesman James Speakes said it provided evidence that the pace of economic growth was quickening as the country completed four years of sustained expansion since the 1981-1982 recession.

Group says seafood not regulated enough

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nutritional group, saying the health benefits of eating fish are being offset by the risk of contamination, launched on Wednesday a quest to set up a new system of federal inspection for seafood.

"This is a public health scandal in the making," said Ellen Haas, director of Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, a non-profit group.

A study released by the advocacy group said Americans, attracted to fish in growing numbers because it is a healthy source of protein, are at increasing risk from bacterial, viral and toxic contamination because fish is among the least regulated foods.

"We advise consumers to eat fish only with caution (and) to avoid raw fish," Haas told a news conference.

Spokesmen for the fisheries industry, while saying they also favor a stepped-up inspection program for their products, called the Public Voice warnings overblown.

"Americans eat 350 to 400 million pounds of seafood a year," said Roy Martin, science director for the National Fisheries Institute. "Where are the people dropping over? We don't have a great big problem. We do have a perception problem."

Richard Gutting, the institute's lobbyist, said the industry is awaiting the outcome of a two-year, $350,000 federal effort to design an improved inspection and sampling program.

He said other nations, notably Canada, New Zealand, Norway and Japan, have used improvements in their inspection systems as a marketing tool to sell more seafood. More than 60 percent of seafood consumed in the United States is imported, he said.

Public Voice, in a 44-page study, said it is estimated that thousands of Americans become ill each year from eating seafood contaminated with bacteria or viruses.

The report said the federal government should assume responsibility for setting uniform national standards for fish and seafood and set up an inspection program to make sure those standards are met.

'Dallas' star's parents killed at their tavern

BOULDER, Mont. (AP) — Parents of "Dallas" star Patrick Duffy were killed by a gunman at the tavern they owned and two suspects, one with a girlfriend's tip and a high-speed chase, officials said Wednesday.

Terrence and Marie Duffy, whose son plays Bobby Ewing on the popular CBS television series, were killed late Tuesday in a western Montana town.

Patrick Duffy, 37, was flying from Los Angeles, said John Rinen, a friend of the family in Boulder.

Filming of "Dallas" shut down in the morning, but Duffy and the crew to continue work on the shooting resumed in the afternoon. Lorimar-Telepictures spokeswoman Barbara Brigid said in Los Angeles.

The slayings apparently were motivated by robbery.

Panel attacks all-terrain vehicles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Restricting use of the all-terrain vehicles by youngsters, improving rider training and requiring better suspensions could help reduce accidents involving the popular motorized tricycles, Consumer Product Safety Commission officials said Wednesday.

"Driver inexperience is a highly significant factor," in the more than 100,000 injuries annually involving these machines, said Rae Newman of the commission's Directorate for Epidemiology.

People with less than a month's experience riding the off-road vehicles have 13 times the risk of an accident than the average rider, Newman said. More than half of all accidents involve drivers under age 16 — although they constitute less than one-third of riders, she said.

Roy Deppa, of the agency's Directorate for Engineering Sciences, told the commission that requiring a full suspension on all wheels of these vehicles would improve driver control.

At a briefing culminating an 18-month investigation into the hazards of the vehicles, which have become both widely popular in recent years, Newman told the Safety Commission, "Riding an ATV is a very complex feat."

Little known before the start of this decade, more than 2 million of the vehicles are now in use in America, primarily as recreational vehicles in beach and wooded areas.

At the same time, the toll of deaths and injuries has skyrocketed. There have been 559 ATV-related deaths reported since 1982, 50,000 injuries requiring hospital treatment in the first half of this year alone.

Any decision by the three-member commission on whether to issue the recommendations is unlikely in a few weeks.

Market rebounds after trading scandal

NEW YORK (AP) — There is growing uneasiness among some people on Wall Street that the insider-trading scandal leaves the stock market vulnerable to a nasty spill.

But Wall Street's best-known stocks rebounded Wednesday from the market's severe decline in the previous session, and other analysts commented on the talk of the possible collapse in the market.

"If the end of the world was coming, today should have been equally as bad as yesterday, and certainly it's not," said Ralph Bloch, senior vice president of the investment firm

Raymond James & Associates in St. Petersburg, Fla. "I think the market is going to shake this off and ignore it."

Manuel Johnson, vice chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, also predicted the scandal would not permanently harm the U.S. financial system.

"There's always a temporary reaction and an overreaction to these sort of things that can temporarily impair financial market confidence," Johnson told reporters in Washington.

Stocks falling in price again outnumbered rising issues on the New York Stock Exchange, and related stocks again suffered from the heaviest losses. But the Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 43.31 Tuesday. Some other market indexes also advanced.

Nonetheless, some analysts tend to see the market recently had mainly on the strength of first takeover speculation, and that the widening scandal this week abruptly ended most rumors that it had kicked the support out from under the market.
