A&M to play No. 5 Texas in volleyball

By Ken Sury
Sports Editor

Once again, it's Texas A&M against the University of Texas in the Southwest Conference volleyball finale when the two teams square off tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Gregory Gym in Austin.

But they're not playing for the SWC championship — that's already been decided. Texas is the SWC champion and A&M is runner-up for the fifth year in a row.

About the only thing that could possibly be decided tonight is whether the 23-12 Aggies will receive an NCAA tournament bid. But A&M Coach Al Givens said he's not concerned about that.

"I don't believe if we win or lose it's going to make a difference," Givens said. "I think we'll be judged on our own merits."

Although Texas is 9-0 in the SWC and 23-4 overall, the Baylor Bears surprised the Longhorns Tuesday night in Waco, going four games with Texas before losing.

"I really believe the pressure's on Texas," Givens said. "They're the ones ranked fifth in the nation. Maybe we'll catch them looking past us."

"But we'll have to duplicate our effort from the first time we met and then add some."

Things took a turn for the worse for A&M after the first Texas match. A&M had a 16-4 record going into the contest, but has gone 7-7 since then, including a five-game loss to Rice in G. Rolie White Coliseum.

"We'll just try to regroup and do the things that made us successful for the first half of the season," Givens said.

If A&M doesn't get an NCAA bid, then tonight will be the last match for seniors Stacey Gildner, Laura Hoppe, Stacey Smith, Margaret Spence and Chris Zogata.

"These are five seniors who have never beaten Texas," Givens said. "So it's certainly an incentive to play their best."

Givens said he was somewhat disturbed that so much emphasis always is placed on the A&M-Texas match.

"It seems to me that (for Aggies) the whole season is based on whether you win or lose against Texas," he said. "We play a lot of other matches throughout the season, so that shouldn't govern whether or not you've had a successful season."

Olajuwon signs significant new contract with Rockets

NEW YORK (AP) — The contract signed by Akeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets could be more significant for its length, 12 years, than for its reported $2.5 million a year average, in the view of Larry Fleisher, executive director of the NBA Players Association.

"There are some players who are making close to that, some more and some less," said Fleisher, who is also a players agent. "If this signifies any trend at all, and I'm not sure it does, I don't think it would be money. I think it would be long-term contracts, which seem to be becoming more common now."

Fleisher said he saw both good and bad in the long-term arrangements.

"The club owners may feel they are locking in the future with this type of contract, making it so they know what their financial obligations will be long-term," he said in an interview Tuesday.

"It does give the player security for himself and his family, but the important thing is that the player who signs a long-term contract must understand what he is signing. You look at salaries over the past 10 years, some players (signing long-term contracts) may be shortchanging themselves."

Akeem Olajuwon

"But I think the thing that is most dangerous about (long-term contracts) is that four or five years down the road the player may look around and decide he has to renegotiate the contract," Fleisher added.

Olajuwon, Houston's 7-foot center and half of their Twin Towers, signed a contract extension that will keep him in a Rockets' uniform until the 1997-1998 NBA season.

The 12-year agreement includes a renegotiation of the remaining four years of Olajuwon's previous contract. According to published reports, the new pact will pay Olajuwon $2.5 million a year, reported $1,082,250 this year, and escalate to $1,797,660 in 1997. His average salary for the length of the new contract, all of which is guaranteed, reportedly will be $1.5 million.

Fleisher, who does not represent Olajuwon but does a number of other NBA players, said, "Those figures are pretty close. I have been hearing that this could influence some players' contract negotiations, probably will just be used by a guide to what else is going on."

The Nigerian-born Olajuwon in the third year of a six-year contract that paid him an estimated $882,000 per year.

Now Rockets owner Calipari Thomas can start negotiating the other half of the Twin Towers — 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson, whose million per year contract ends this season.

Bruce Stockberger, who represents Sampson, said he and his client are "looking at it (Olajuwon's contract) from all different angles. We've decided we're going to just fight for a while and see what happens."
