But she said that she doesn't think the redpots, who are in charge of the bonfire, condone this type of behavior.

While Weaver suffered cuts and bruises, she says the injuries are not what hurt her the most.

"What hurts me the most is that absolutely nobody came to help me," she said. "In fact, they thought it was 'good bull' that I was abused."

"I'm not condemning bonfire because I think it's a great tradition. But the attitude of 'We're gonna build this great bonfire for Aggie spirit, but we're gonna beat Aggies while we do it' has to go."

"I don't think any less of the tradition of the bonfire, but I have to wonder about some of the people who work on it, especially if they do this."

Weaver said she will be going back out to bonfire after she recuperates from the events of the last few days. But, she said, she will never again go alone.

William Kibler, associate director of student affairs and adviser for bonfire, said Thursday that women are not prevented from working on the bonfire stack.

"There is absolutely nothing keeping women from working on stack," Kibler said. "Working on stack is regarded as a kind of privilege by the people who work on the bonfire. Bonfire requires a lot of very physical work, and if a woman is willing to do the same work as a male, then she should be allowed to work on the stack."

FAA orders inspection of planes

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration ordered airlines Thursday to inspect nearly 100 Lockheed L-1011 jetliners for possible cracking in the wing after a fracture was found in one of the Delta Air Lines wide-body jets.

The FAA action was taken after the National Transportation Safety Board, investigating the Delta incident, raised concern about possible metal fatigue in the wing support beams of the L-1011 jets and urged an immediate inspection.

Spokesmen have said that the required inspections have been completed or are underway.
