High school prospects leery of SWC

DALLAS (AP) — Several top high school football prospects say problems with the NCAA will keep them away from Southern Methodist, while another says he's not interested in any Southwest Conference school.

Dallas Carter's Darren Lewis, considered one of the nation's top high school running backs, said he won't play in the SWC because too many of the league's schools have been hit with allegations of recruiting violations.

"I don't want my football career to end because some other guy takes money," Lewis said. "With all their schools getting in trouble, I think I'll have to stay away from the Southwest Conference."

Lewis told the Dallas Times Herald that the latest round of allegations against SMU didn't affect his decision, but Duncanville running back Barry Foster said the latest problems could cause him to cross SMU off his list.

"If the football program ends, what's the use of going there?" said Foster, who is considering UCLA, Ohio State, Southern California and Arkansas. "It's a good school and I'm sure I'd like it, but I want to play football, too."

SMU's football program, which the NCAA placed on three years' probation in August 1985, could be suspended for up to two years if the recent allegations are verified by the NCAA.

Former linebacker David Stanley told the NCAA that he received $25,000 to sign with SMU and that he and his mother received $750 a month while he was playing for the Mustangs. Stanley contended the payments continued after the SMU went on its most recent probation.

Tight end Albert Reese was suspended for SMU's final two games in the wake of reports that he received a rent-free apartment.

Texas Christian also is on probation, while other NCAA rules violations have been alleged at Houston, Texas Tech, Texas and Texas A&M.

SMU Coach Bobby Collins said he is concerned that slow action by the NCAA will hurt his recruiting efforts.

"I'd love to see it cleared up next week, but I know it won't happen," he said. "We've got to demand action will be taken. We've been crucified already. Somewhere in the world there has to be fairness."

Carter linebacker Jerome Pipkin said that unless the SMU case is resolved soon, "I won't go there. I don't want to share the sentiment shared by Carter line Dwayne Phorne, considered to be a top prospect in North Texas."

"If it's still up in the air, I'd be nervous about going there," Phorne said.

Baseball writers vote Todd Worrell NL rookie of year

NEW YORK (AP) — It didn't take St. Louis Cardinals' reliever Todd Worrell long to react Monday to the good news that he was the National League's Rookie of the Year — with a piece of bad news for the league's hitters.

Worrell, who fell one vote short of being a unanimous selection in balloting by the Baseball Writers Association of America, announced that his blazing fastball and hard slider would be augmented next season... hopefully by a baffling changeup.

"When I get to spring training, I can concentrate on a changeup," Worrell said by conference call from Temple City, Calif. "I'm going to be talking to (pitching coach) Mike Roarke about throwing a changeup to left-handed hitters."

That can't be good news for the hitters, considering that Worrell led the league in saves with 36, while fashioning a tidy 2.08 earned run average.

"A good hitter will hit it (an offspeed pitch)," Worrell conceded. "But, if I did have any problems (last season), they were against left-handed hitters."

Worrell, a 27-year-old right-hander, got 23 of 24 first-place votes in easily outdistancing San Francisco Giants second baseman Rob Thompson. Worrell, 9-10, collected 118 points in balloting by two writers from each of the league's 12 cities.

Thompson got 46 points on a 5-3-1 basis, while utility man Kevin Mitchell of the New York Mets was third with 22, including the other first-place vote.

Worrell said that winning the award was due in part to having "the right people in my life at the right time."

He credited Chicago White Sox Manager Jim Fregosi for easing him through the transition from starter to reliever when Fregosi piloted the Cardinals' American Association team at Louisville in 1985.

"I think that's when things all came together," Worrell said. "I think I would have gotten to the major leagues as a starter, but I don't think I would have been at my best in that role."

Worrell, who appeared only three times in relief in three seasons prior to the transition in July 1985, made an instant impression on the Cardinals. He posted a 3-0 record and a 2.91 ERA in 17 games.

In October, he was the winning pitcher when Jack Clark homered off Tom Niedenfuer of the Los Angeles Dodgers, giving St. Louis the NL pennant. And he was the losing pitcher when umpire Don Denkinger's disputed call at first base helped the Kansas City Royals win Game 6 of the World Series. The Royals then won the Series the following night.

Bowls should be filled after weekend action

(AP) — The late scramble this weekend for berths in the Cotton, Sugar, Orange and Sun bowls will create some strange bedfellows.

Imagine an Arkansas Razorback rooting for a Texas Longhorn? That hasn't happened for a while.

"I'm going to be there hooking those Horns all week," said Arkansas nose tackle Tony Chericco, who dates Texas Coach Fred Akers' daughter. "I'm a big Longhorn fan now. I'll even suit up for them."

A Cotton Bowl opponent for seventh-ranked Ohio State will be decided Thursday night when Texas plays A&M. A victory by the Aggies, ranked 13th in The Associated Press poll, would give A&M the Southwest Conference title and the host berth in the Cotton Bowl, sending No. 11 Arkansas to the Orange Bowl... maybe.

A victory by Texas would give the Razorbacks their first trip to the Cotton Bowl since 1976. As a loser, A&M would go to the Orange Bowl to oppose third-ranked Oklahoma... maybe.

Those maybes would be definite if second-ranked Penn State didn't have an escape clause in its Fiesta Bowl contract. The Nittany Lions will play at Tempe, Ariz., against top-ranked Miami on Jan. 2... probably.

Should the Hurricanes lose to 2-8 East Carolina on Thursday night, Penn State would face Big Eight champion Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl. That would leave Miami awaiting an opponent at Tempe.

Enter Arkansas or A&M. The SWC runner-up will need a place to play should be it replaced in the Orange Bowl by Penn State.

With that problem solved, the next question is the identity of the Sugar Bowl host against Nebraska.

The Southeastern Conference champion is the host team in the Sugar Bowl. Alabama can be Louisiana State for the title by defeating Auburn on Saturday.

"We will not make a decision relative to a tie — if one should occur — until the season's over," said Mickey Holmes, the Sugar Bowl's executive director.

Holmes said the selection committee would meet Sunday, after Alabama plays Auburn and LSU closes its season against Tulane on Saturday night, to choose the SEC representative.

With that piece of the puzzle in place, the final bowl matchup would be set. Either LSU or Alabama would be El Paso-bound for a Christmas Day showdown in the Sun Bowl against Washington. Unless...
