Bentsen calls trade top issue

McALLEN (AP) — Sen. Lloyd Bentsen promised Monday to make trade his No. 1 concern as chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, saying to open foreign markets "is critical to agriculture but should also be a high national priority."
"Right now, a Texas farmer may be driving a Toyota pickup, using a Honda generator and watching a Sony TV, only he's not being able to sell his beef or his rice or his citrus in Japan and we know that's not right," Bentsen told members of the Texas Farm Bureau at their 53rd annual meeting.
"I'm not a protectionist, I'm a pragmatist," the Texas Democrat said in calling for sanctions against countries that erect barriers to the United States but erect barriers to U.S. goods.
"It's appropriate that in my first major policy speech (since being named Finance Committee chairman), I've chosen to appear before a group representing agriculture, the nation's largest and most troubled industry," said the state's senior senator.

He said agriculture is more dependent on foreign trade than any other industry in the country, yet farm exports continue to slide.
Bentsen said he would fight for legislation to penalize countries that erect trade barriers to U.S. goods while dumping products in the United States below cost.
Bentsen promised to work for the first coordinated trade policy.

He said the Reagan administration also must be more aggressive in rolling back trade barriers and that a more effective U.S. Court of Appeals was needed to hear cases of unfair trade practices.
Without free trade and a market for U.S. goods, Bentsen said the country's economy would be based on service industries.
"Our muscle will turn to Jell-O if we de-industrialize," he said. "I warn you, you can't remain a world leader and keep your defenses strong with a Taco Bell economy."

Some kids enjoy unusual names

AUSTIN (AP) — Among the famous ones are Frank's kids, Dweezil and Moon Unit Zappa; Tatum O'Neal (Ryan's daughter); Chastity and Elijah Blue (Gher's children); and China (daughter of Grace Slick).
They are kids who, at birth, were saddled with names that weighed more than they did. And it's not just rockers and movie stars who give their kids unusual names.
Many local kids who bear 50-cent names say they like them.
"I love mine," said Thor Oakley Armbruster, 18, a senior at Westlake High. "It sets me apart a little. I like having a name that's not like anybody else's."

Officials: A&M, UT murders probably not connected

By Jo Ann Able
Staff Writer

The possibility of a link between the strangling murder of a Texas A&M graduate student Nov. 25 and that of a University of Texas student two days later is weak, a spokesman for the Austin Police Department said Monday.
The body of Linden Kauffman-Linam, 34, an A&M graduate student in the Department of Oceanography, was discovered the night of Nov. 25 at her apartment outside of College Station. In an article in Thursday's Bryan-College Station Eagle, Brazos County Sheriff Ronnie Miller said the woman apparently was strangled with a rope or a cord.

The Associated Press reported Friday that Connie Jane Bibb, 28, a senior education major at the University of Texas, was strangled to death with a pair of pantyhose Thursday night in her Austin home. The victim was discovered with a scarf stuffed in her mouth.
Austin police spokesman Kellye Norris said speculation that the two cases might be related originated with an Austin television station.
"We're leaving the possibility open that they could be related because right now anything is possible," Norris said, "but any link between the two is really weak."

Norris said an expert in personality profiles from the Texas Department of Public Safety will be working on the case later this week.
Dr. Roberto Bayardo, Tarrant County medical examiner, said there was no evidence of sexual assault in the Austin killing.
But Bob Wiatt, director of security and University police at A&M, said Sunday that the Kauffman-Linam murder was sex-related. He is assisting with this investigation because of his experience with investigating sex-related homicides when he worked for the FBI.

Lab worker files suit challenging urine test

AUSTIN (AP) — A woman who says her employer has no right to check her urine filed a lawsuit Monday asking the courts to kill the company's plan to test all workers for drugs.
"I feel that I'm an American citizen, and I deserve my privacy," said Brenda Jennings, quality control supervisor for Minco Technology Lab Inc. "I think this is an invasion of my privacy."
Company officials said the tests are needed because a former employee with a drug problem stole $250,000 worth of parts while employed and because its products go to the military.
"We feel very strongly from a business standpoint that it had to be done," said Liz Coker, chief executive officer for Minco.
Employees who fail the drug test would be allowed to keep their jobs if they enter a drug treatment program and submit to periodic tests, she said.
Minco customizes microchips and sells them to firms that use them in products sold to the military. Coker said none of the work done at Minco is classified.

said it was the first Texas suit challenging drug testing by private employers.
State District Judge Joe Hart of Austin has scheduled a Tuesday hearing on the TCLU's request for an order that would ban the tests until the trial is completed.
James Harrington, TCLU's legal director, said urine tests "violate every concept of human dignity and offends any reasonable person."
He said he would base his case on a 1903 Texas Supreme Court decision that barred a railroad from forcing an employee to submit to a urine test. The case involved an employee who sued after being injured on the job.
Jennings said she is upset that Minco plans to have workers "observed" when giving the urine sample. But Roger Minard, Minco president, said the observation is not intrusive.
"They don't watch you go to the bathroom," Minard said. "There's someone in the room. They don't watch you."
Minard added that the observer is needed "to be sure that the individual giving the specimen doesn't bring in someone else's specimen."
In a Sept. 29 memo to employees, Coker said, "Drug abuse and employment with Minco Technology Labs Inc. are simply incompatible. Further, the sensitive nature of our mission and product, and, in particular, our status as subcontory and Noah and Kendall and Trey.

But we're talking real unusual names here.
Names like Wroe and Kam and Cade for boys.
Or Mystan and Sabre and Kesler and Kierce for girls.
The kids seem to think that their first names set them apart and allow them some individuality.
Austin High student Tirzah Mc-Lain already has decided that if she has a daughter of her own, she'll give her an unusual name, too. She favors Tezena Murisa.
"I hate plain names," Tirzah said. "My middle name is Kim, and to tell the truth, I hate it. For me, my name is a conversation piece. People ask what your name is and you tell them and they say, 'Oh, how pretty.' They ask how you got the name, and to me, it's an ice-breaker when meeting people."

Z James, 15, likes his name, too — even if Z is the name he has wanted for himself from his given name — Zarathustra, which was the name of an ancient Persian prophet.
"I get asked about having a name like Z," he said. "But rather than go into a big explanation, I tell people that it's just Z."
His parents, he said, took his name from the "Thus Spake Zarathustra" — the theme of the movie "2001."

The company had planned to begin the random testing Monday, but Coker said the tests would be postponed pending action on Jennings' suit.
The class-action suit was filed on Jennings' behalf by the Texas Civil Liberties Union, which
