Filipinos celebrate national cease-fire after 17-year fight

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — A rebel commander serenaded thousands of people in a provincial town, and other Communist leaders addressed crowds in Manila to mark the start Wednesday of the first nationwide cease-fire in the 17-year insurgency.
 The cease-fire began at noon with the peal of church bells in provincial cities.
 Thousands of people rallied for hours in the main square of Bacolod, 300 miles south of Manila, where four Communist leaders obliged residents by autographing fans, T-shirts and scraps of paper.
 Nemesio Francisco Demafiles, regional commander of the New People's Army, took out a guitar and played for the crowd.
 "Today's occasion reminds me of the story of the people of Mount Sinai who were given the 10 commandments of love," said the Rev. Francisco Fernandez of the Communist-dominated National Democratic Front.
 "Today we bring the tablets of peace and progress," he told a cheering crowd of nearly 20,000.
 The Philippine News Agency reported a candlelight march of about 3,000 people in Iloilo city, 175 miles south of Manila. Top leaders of the outlawed Communist Party participated.
 Other guerrillas, however, refrained from making public appearances because of unresolved issues including where the rebels could carry firearms.
 In the capital, government negotiator Teofisto Guingona swore a five-member national committee to monitor the 60-day cease-fire. He then appeared with rebel representative Antonio Zumel and called both sides "to exercise the utmost strain and good faith in the spirit making the cease-fire agreement reality."
 The government reported negotiations on the truce's first day, though one man was killed and two were injured when anti-Communist clashed with a leftist group in support of the truce in the western city of Davao.
 President Corazon Aquino made peace with the Communist cornerstone of her national reconciliation policy, said, "If both sides live up to the spirit that motivated (the cease-fire), we shall have peace in this season."
 Peace talks are scheduled to begin within 30 days on land reform, political change and the status of military bases. The Cabinet, at a regular meeting Wednesday, approved supplementary budget of $500 million for rural reform and rehabilitation.

Police officers subdue Samurai-style sniper with water hose blast

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — A sniper dressed in a black martial arts costume and carrying a Samurai sword was subdued by a blast from a water hose Wednesday, 11 hours after he began firing a rifle at random from a building at the University of Kentucky.
 Two men were wounded during the standoff.
 The gunman, Ulysses S. Davis III, had been fired by the university last summer for fighting.
 The blast of water knocked the sword from his hand and pushed him against a wall.
 Sgt. Greg Howard, one of the police officers who had negotiated with Davis, said when the water knocked the sword away, "that made it easy to take him into custody."
 Davis, 25, suffered minor injuries. He was taken to the Fayette County Detention Center, Howard said.
 Davis, who wanted to air grievances about the university, broke off negotiations about $100,000.
 Howard said Davis became irritated and began to make demands, and police began to surround the building. Howard did not see the demands.
 Police said they would charge Davis with multiple offenses, including first degree assault and possession of a handgun.
 Davis had been an employee of the utility crew at the university's Terson Services Building and was fired in July for fighting.
 Police negotiated with him after the siege began about 6 a.m.
