

'Love Boat' viewers tune in to risqué late-night surprise

AUSTIN (AP) — Late-night "Love Boat" fans got a glimpse of more personal passion early Thursday when an Austin television station employee punched a wrong button and patched viewers into pornography.

The station's airing of "Love Boat" went overboard when the master control operator apparently tuned KTVV's satellite into a cable station that offers risqué movies, said Jane Wallace, KTVV-TV's general manager. The employee probably planned to spice up a slow night by watching the movie, she said.

"Hard core," the general manager said in a brief review of the action. "Up close and personal."

Wallace said disciplinary action is being taken.

campus jobs for students. The development program was dropped, he says, when the survey showed that on the average, six students applied for each job opening.

"The community is just small for a university this size," he says. "In Houston or Austin it would be OK."

Because the majority of tax reform affects financial aid awards given this year and after, current students will not be affected as much as those now in high school. But while the A&M financial aid office has yet to receive official regulations on tax reform, the students who need information most may not be getting it at all.

Bryan High School senior counselor Peggy White says she hasn't received any information on tax reform or the changes in GSLs and says she doesn't think her students are informed about changes that may affect them.

"I don't think they're aware and I don't think it's really hit the parents," she says. "I've had maybe one student ask out of 600 seniors. That's not too good."

High school students may be uninformed about changes that may affect them, but Benson says one of his problems comes from knowing perhaps too much about the changes. Staff morale is down, he says, because aid officers — already overworked because of the department's own budget cuts — must away more people from financial aid.

"I've been in financial aid for years, and you get satisfaction from seeing people get an education. It will help them achieve what they want to with their lives," he says.

"I don't think I'll get that feedback as often now."
