Aguirre finally finds niche with Mavs

DALLAS (AP) — Mark Aguirre's 10,000th NBA point came on a hustling play which the temperamental small forward might not have made in the past.

Washington's Charles Jones stuffed a shot back in the Dallas Mavericks' face in the first quarter of Tuesday night's 118-113 victory for the Bullets.

Aguirre fought for the ball again then put it in the basket over the bewildered Jones.

In just five short years, Aguirre, a former All-American at DePaul, had become the first player on the expansion Mavericks to reach the 10,000 point plateau.

Referee Earl Strom stopped the game as the 17,007 fans in Reunion Arena applauded Aguirre and gave the ball to Dallas Coach Dick Motta for safekeeping.

The loss took out most of the joy for Aguirre, who was named this week to the Western Conference NBA All-Star team for the second time.

Aguirre said "getting 10,000 points doesn't mean an awful lot at the moment. I wish we'd gotten all that garbage over sooner. To me, it's a distraction and I'm glad it's over with."

Aguirre has taken on a more business-like demeanor this season.

His celebrated feuds with Dallas Coach Dick Motta have been put on the back burner.

As a result, the Mavericks are leading the Midwest Division and were 11 games over .500 at mid-season.

"I'm very relaxed and dedicating myself to concentrating on my main goal — winning games and getting into the NBA championship series," Aguirre said.

Aguirre averaged 24.4 points a game over 406 games to reach the 10,000 point goal.

He has been Dallas' scoring machine since his rookie year, averaging 18.7 points per game.

He broke into Motta's system around scoring by the mid-way.

Aguirre scored 13 points in his All-Star game in Denver.

There was talk Aguirre might be traded in the off-season but Don Carter interceded and has been able to be a settling influence.

Crime allegations hit UTEP athletic program

EL PASO (AP) — Allegations of athletes' shoplifting and a dormitory gang rape have made this a tough season for sports at Texas-El Paso, where the track and cross-country programs are already on probation.

"I can remember athletes getting in trouble. I can't remember when we've gotten so much publicity," said Joe Avila, UTEP dean of students since 1976.

Basketball players Tim Hardaway and Keith Manuel and his brother, former football player Gerry Manuel, were arrested Oct. 29 and charged with misdemeanor theft for allegedly stealing two $15 plants from a nursery.

The three were in a car borrowed from assistant coach Rus Bradburd, a violation of NCAA regulations.

On Nov. 16, basketball player Chris Sandle and former football player Greg Williams were accused of taking $16.66 worth of groceries from a supermarket.

More recently, football players Roderick Tobias Richard, Dwight Myers and Charles Edward Lewis were arrested Jan. 19 and accused in an alleged gang rape at the campus dorm.

"What some athletes do looks so much worse because they get the publicity, but it's not disproportionate to the rest of society," Avila said Tuesday. "There's as many non-athletes getting into bad things."

But Avila also said he was not belittling the accusations.

"The athletic department, the coaches talk to the players on how behavior reflects on the university, that they're role models," he said, adding that he has spoken to some of the players involved. "I don't think that these students, after I've talked to them, think I'm unfriendly."

An 18-year-old woman, who a UTEP student, told police Richard threatened her with a stolen her purse and invited her to have sex with her for $2 in a room in Barry Hall, a dorm on campus.

"Fifteen-dollar plants and worth of lunch meat is a lot different than the other," Cords said. "It's hell of a difference."

Basketball Coach Don Haskins, in his 26th year at UTEP, was not available for comment, his secretary said.
