

about going to class.

Leaving for class at the last minute, not having to worry about cooking or utility payments (since no cooking is allowed in the dorm rooms and utilities are included in the rent) and living in close contact with hundreds of other students are among the advantages of on-campus living.

However, dorm rooms offer very little privacy, space or individuality. Although some students appreciate not having to hassle with dirty dishes, others would prefer the opportunity to cook. Noise can also be a problem in dorm rooms with thin walls, and unreasonable roommates can turn you away from your home away from home.

Off-campus housing solves

many of these problems by providing more space. Just having that one extra room can relieve the mundaneness of a one-room home.

Apartments and houses create an atmosphere much like
