

Lady Longhorns' Lloyd is Larry Bird of women's basketball

AUSTIN (AP) — Andrea Lloyd is regarded as women's basketball's answer to Boston Celtics star Larry Bird. She would rather pass than score. Tough defense is her trademark. And she wants the basketball in the "crunch minutes" of a close game.

If the University of Texas Lady Longhorns are to repeat as NCAA women's national basketball champions, they'll have to get two big games from the only senior on their team — Lloyd.

The 6-foot-2 All-American from Moscow, Idaho, provided the key points as Texas defeated Rutgers 85-77 in the final of the East Regional.

Lloyd, who plays three different positions, averages 13 points, nine assists, three rebounds and three steals a game. In the NCAA Tournament, she is shooting 65 percent from the field, 71 percent at the free-throw line and has 15 steals in three games.

"Andrea is the heart of our team," Texas Coach Jody Conradt says. "She's our leader. There is no better player in college basketball. Her defense is just incredible. She's the most complete player I've seen."

Lloyd has been giving her younger teammates some lectures this week.

"I keep thinking how young this team is, and I want to convey to the younger players not to blow this chance we have," Lloyd said. "I don't have another chance."

"I think it hurts us that we're young. Look at Louisiana Tech, where they have all senior starters. I just don't want our team to settle for less because they know they can come back next year."

Louisiana Tech, the 1982 champion, has knocked Texas out of two regionals and again stands in the Lady Longhorns' championship path as the sixth annual tournament gets under way today with the semi-final games.

The Lady Techsters, who are 29-2, take on the defending national champion Lady Longhorns, 31-1, at 6 p.m. before a sellout house of 16,000 fans in the Special Events Center. Texas has won 25 games in a row.

Louisiana Tech beat Iowa 66-65 in the final of the Midwest Regional to advance to Austin.

In the second game at 9 p.m., the Long Beach State Lady 49ers, 33-2, meet the Tennessee Lady Volunteers, 26-6.
