U.S. military adviser, 43 soldiers killed in base raid in El Salvador

EL PARAISO, El Salvador (AP) — Guerrillas raided a major army base before dawn Tuesday, killing at least 43 soldiers and a U.S. military adviser, the first to die during battle in the 7-year-old civil war.
El Salvador's military commander said the American, identified as Staff Sgt. Gregory A. Fronius, 27, of Greensburg, Pa., was killed by mortar fire near a command post.
The military said 35 soldiers were wounded by leftist rebels who assaulted the base behind a barrage of cannon, mortar and grenade fire. Base commander Col. Gilberto Rubio, who was slightly wounded, said the number of attackers had not been determined.

is nearly 40 miles north of San Salvador, capital of this Central American country.
Gen. Adolfo Blandon, chief of the armed forces, said, "Because of the seriousness of the injuries, the number of dead (soldiers) may increase." He visited the base to assess the situation.
Soldiers on the scene estimated government casualties at about 65 dead and more than 100 wounded.
According to U.S. policy, American advisers do not participate in offensive military action or enter areas where combat is occurring or likely, but may visit "carefully selected and secure sites" such as garrisons. They are armed and may respond if fired upon.
The United States has a self-imposed ceiling of 55 on the number of advisers serving in El Salvador at one time, but sometimes fewer are on duty.

Tuesday's rebel attack was the largest since June 1986 guerrilla assault on the army base San Miguel, 86 miles east of San Salvador. Military said 50 soldiers were killed or wounded there, but the rebels claimed a total of 250.
U.S. Embassy spokesman Pen Agnew said Fronius was training Salvadoran troops at the El Paraiso garrison.
Blandon said the rebels began firing mortar and grenade launchers and a 90mm cannon at the command post, barracks and mess hall. He said 250 soldiers were at the base. Most of the dead and wounded were in the barracks and "there may have been fatalities because some of the bodies of the terrorists found inside the barracks," Blandon said.
The command post, a barracks and an officers mess were destroyed and other buildings damaged. Reporters saw at least three destroyed military vehicles.

Japanese official says retaliation possible if U.S. imposes penalties

TOKYO (AP) — Anti-American sentiment among Japanese citizens will grow if the United States goes ahead with penalty duties on up to $300 million worth of Japanese electronic goods, a senior government official said Tuesday.
"The atmosphere in Japan against the Americans will become — not so good," said Noburo Hatakeyama, director general of the International Trade Administration Bureau.
"They would think the United States is emotional and illogical," he said.
Hatakeyama repeated warnings from other Japanese officials that Japan would consider retaliation if its negotiators cannot dissuade the United States from going ahead with the penalty duties. But he did not offer any details on what form the retaliation might take.
"We might get tough," he told a group of foreign journalists. "What is important is to ask them to withdraw the duties and ask them to understand the true situation. And we can retaliate after that if necessary."

Although Japan is striving to cut its huge trade surplus, it cannot make any concessions on semiconductor trade to fend off the planned U.S. penalty duties because it is doing nothing wrong, Hatakeyama said.
"If we offer any concessions, then that suggests we acknowledge having violated the agreement," he said. "But in this case we've done nothing wrong, so there is nothing we can concede."
The Reagan administration said last week it plans to impose prohibitive tariffs on a range of Japanese electronic goods in mid-April to force Japan into compliance with an accord on semiconductors.

and to avoid selling its chips in foreign markets at unfair low prices.
Trade concerns caused in part by the semiconductor dispute caused the dollar to keep sinking Tuesday in Tokyo to another low. The dollar closed at 145.65 yen, down from Monday's close of 146.20 yen, which had been its lowest point since modern exchange rates were set in the late 1940s.
The steep fall of the dollar, although it should help shrink trade imbalances, has raised fears of recession in Japan and inflation and higher interest rates in the United States.
Prices on the Tokyo stock market dipped again Tuesday in reaction to dollar jitters.
Hatakeyama said the duties on electronic products, scheduled to take effect in two weeks, would have minimal financial impact, but "the psychological impact would be very big."

Kidnappers report hostage's health deteriorating rapidly, demand swap

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Muslim kidnappers said Tuesday that the health of hostage Alann Steen was "deteriorating day by day" and renewed a demand to swap him, two other Americans and an Indian for 400 Arabs in Israeli jails.
"Steen's death will not alter the demand for the release of 400 prisoners," the Islamic Jihad for the Liberation of Palestine said in a handwritten Arabic statement delivered to the offices of the Beirut independent newspaper An-Nahar.
The statement, accompanied by a photograph of U.S. hostage Jesse Turner, said the captives "have been committed for investigation into their crimes."

"All indications suggest that we shall reckon with them and punish them as long as the American administration and the Zionist enemy are not responsive," it said.
The statement said the health of Steen, 47, of Boston was "deteriorating day by day despite continuous medication."
The group had released a videotaped message last Thursday in which Turner said Steen had difficulty in breathing and was dying because of high blood pressure.

On March 23, Islamic Jihad said Steen had fallen ill in captivity and would die within 10 days. In that statement, however, the group offered to free him if Israel releases 100 Arab prisoners.
The group demanded the release of 400 Arab prisoners on Jan. 24, when gunmen disguised as Lebanese riot policemen abducted the four educators from the campus of Beirut University College.
But two weeks later it withdrew the offer, claiming U.S. and Israeli procrastination.
Israel had announced it would not negotiate the swap and the U.S. administration said it would pressure Israel into a trade.

Turner, 39, is from Boise. The other two hostages are Michael Polhill, 53, of New York City; Mithleshwar Singh, 60, a teacher in India and legal resident alien in the United States.
An employee at An-Nahar who showed the photograph to a newspaper said Turner wore a white T-shirt and blinking camera flashbulb. The flashbulb was identical to that of photographs by the shadowy group.

Reagan optimistic about economic gauges

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's main gauge of future economic activity rose 0.7 percent in February, prompting renewed optimism from the Reagan administration about economic prospects later this year.
However, many private economists said the Index of Leading Indicators was overstating economic strength. They said the long-awaited rebound in growth will be a modest one at best.

The 0.7 percent rise in the index in February followed a revised 0.5 percent January decline and was the best showing since a 2.4 percent surge in December.
At the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the February gain was a good sign that the economy "appears to be back on track after a brief pause the first month of the year."
Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said the index has risen at a robust annual rate of 8 percent over the past six months, supporting the administration's hopes for faster growth this year.

"Based on past relationships, that gain is consistent with stepped-up growth in real gross national product during the first half of 1987," Baldrige said.
In another economic report released Tuesday, the Commerce Department said that orders for factories for manufactured products boosted by a surge in demand for military hardware, rose 4.3 percent in February, the best showing in 10 months.

The increase put February's total at $194.6 billion.
Economists said the order advance and the jump in the index were both signs the economy will continue growing this year.
