Witnesses of the Resurrection

(second in a series of paid advertisements by the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saint Student Association.)

As Easter approaches this year many of us will reflect on the perfect example of the Savior Jesus Christ. We reread with awe and wonder the New Testament accounts of the closing events which led to our Easter celebration of today. Yet for others, the course of time and distance since then may seem to have altered the significance and timelessness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ.

In the 13th chapter of 2nd Corinthians the Apostle Paul reminds those that in the mouth of two or three witnesses shall every word be established. In light of this scripture, we rejoice in the remarkable discovery and translation, by the gift and power of God, of a second witness testifying of the mission of Christ. This other Scripture, known to members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints as the Book of Mormon describes the religious history of Holy Land inhabitants who migrated to the Americas centuries ago. Of most significance in this record is the discription of the visitation of Jesus Christ to these people shortly after His Resurrection where He revealed to them the Gospel He had taught in the Old World.

These two marvelous Scriptures serve as dual witnesses that Christ indeed broke the bonds of death and resurrected and testify of the universal love and concern of God for all mankind.

A&M business college places no emphasis on courses in ethics

By Melanie Perkins Staff Writer

Business schools around the country are intensifying efforts to teach their students ethics, but Texas A&M is not one of them. "In terms of a direct focus, there are no courses in ethics (in the College of Business Administration),' Dr. Samuel Gillespie, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration, said. "There has been no discussion that that particular topic should be given any more emphasis than any other."

A&M's idea differs from the Harvard Business School, which recently received a $30 million gift to finance a program in ethics teaching.

This is not to say business students at A&M are not taught ethics. They are, but in the course of their normal class work, Gillespie said.

Like Dr. Michael Hitt, head of the marketing department, said, "We want our Aggies to be ethical.'

Gillespie pointed out the policy classes in the various departments, such as MGMT 466, Management Policy, and MKTG 448, Marketing Management, in which ethical issues, as social responsibility, are taught in the bulk of the material. He also mentioned MGMT 211, the Legal and Social Environment of Business, which teaches the role of law in business and society, legal reasoning and other business laws. Hitt said MGMT 363, the Organizing Process, serves as an introduction to the issue of ethics. Students learn about social responsibility of companies and managerial ethics in the course, he said.

Three of these courses, MGMT 211, MGMT 363 and MGMT 466, are requirements for graduation in the College of Business Administra-

Gillespie said many business students, with the encouragement of the business department, take PHIL 483, Professional Ethics, which fulfills one of their humanity require-

Dr. Manuel Davenport, professor of philosophy and humanities, tea-ches PHIL 483. He said business students are the largest single group taking the class, followed by engineering students.

The course focuses on the kinds of problems encountered in various professions, Davenport said, and starts out with some standard ethical

Whether or not a person behaves in an ethical manner is determined by a long period of education and home training, he said. "What a course — one course even — in ethics can do is, assuming the person does have some ethical sensibility, is get the person to apply that sensibility," he said. He said the main value of ethics courses is to make students aware of ethical issues that exist that they didn't even know about.
