Civilian president ousts general after mutinies

Argentinian leader names new army chief

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — President Raul Alfonsin, after guiding his civilian government through two military mutinies, dismissed his army chief Monday and named a new general to the post. The Easter week rebellions were the most serious threats to Alfonsin's administration since his inauguration in December 1983 ended nearly eight years of military rule. Alfonsin first appointed his civilian defense minister, Horacio Jaunarena, to serve temporarily as army chief and Monday night he named Gen. Jose Segundo Dante Caridi to the post. Presidential Press Secretary Jose Ignacio Lopez announced that Caridi had been selected as a permanent replacement for Gen. Hector Rios Erenu. His resignation was early Monday, 20 hours after Alfonsin personally intervened to end a three-day mutiny by some 150 army troops at a military camp outside Buenos Aires. Caridi, 56, who had served as army inspector general, was selected by Alfonsin and Jaunarena after an "intense day of consultation," Lopez said. At least 9,000 people vanished during the "dirty war" against leftists under military juntas. About 250 officers face charges. The army rebels demanded amnesty for those accused of human rights abuses and the resignation of the army chief of staff, Gen. Hector Rios Erenu. Hundreds of thousands of people went into the streets to help Alfonsin through the crisis. The newspaper Diario Popular's headline Monday said: "The People Triumph!" About 400,000 people responded to urgings from radio and television announcers Sunday to gather in the huge Plaza de Mayo and "defend our democracy." They were there when the president flew to the rebel camp and persuaded the 150 rebellious officers to surrender. Rios Erenu's dismissal appeared to be part of the deal. Defense Minister Horacio Jaunarena, a civilian, was replacing him temporarily and a senior army officer is expected to be chosen later. The chief of staff angered many officers because of his order that those wanted for questioning in human rights cases testify in civilian courts. In addition to the approximately 250 officers who face charges, five members of ruling military juntas have been convicted and sent to prison for terms ranging from 4 1/2 years to life. Government sources say the Supreme Court is preparing a new interpretation of the law that could provide exemption from prosecution for officers who were ordered to commit crimes by their superiors. If the interpretation of "due obedience" is adopted, charges against the 250 officers could be dropped, according to the sources. Argentina's army of 60,000 is the strongest of the armed services and the most consistent critic of Alfonsin, who was a human rights lawyer before his election.

Appeals court rules Hustler magazine not liable for bizarre death of youth

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Hustler magazine cannot be held legally liable for the death of a teen-ager who hanged himself while attempting a bizarre kind of masturbation described in the publication, a federal appeals court ruled Monday. Bob G. Rogers, a former Texas A&M professor of journalism and editor of the Bryan-College Station Eagle was an expert witness at the trial-court level. He said he testified on the structure of the words that were used in the article that described the practice and on how he thought the words were put together. The whole point of the trial, Rogers said, was whether or not Hustler could be held responsible for the young boy's death even though the article contained disclaimers stating the practice was dangerous and shouldn't be tried. "It seemed to me that the way the whole thing was put together with the disclaimers they (Hustler) had was pretty cynically done and wasn't really intended to stop anybody from doing it," Rogers said. Rogers testified that in a sense the disclaimers weren't real disclaimers but were fraudulent. The decision by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed a Texas jury's $182,000 award to the mother of the youth and to a friend who found the boy hanged in a closet. Court records identify the dead child only as 14-year-old Troy D. Troy's friend was identified as Andy V. The victim's mother was identified as Diane Herceg of Texas. "The constitutional protection accorded to the freedom of speech and of the press is not based on the naive belief that speech can do no harm but on the confidence that the benefits society reaps from the free flow and exchange of ideas outweigh the costs society endures by receiving reprehensible or dangerous ideas," Judge Alvin

Rubin wrote on behalf of a three-judge panel in the appeals court. In this case, according to court records, the tentatively "reprehensible or dangerous" words were published in the August 1981 issue of Hustler. A copy of the issue was found at the home of Troy D. when his body was discovered. That issue contained an article on the topic of "autoerotic asphyxia" — cutting off the supply to the brain at the moment of orgasm "hanging" oneself. According to Rubin's opinion, an editor was placed "on the page so that it is likely the first text the reader will read." The 5th Circuit held that the Hustler editor neither advocated the act that led to the death nor did it incite the teen-ager to the dangerous practice. Judge Edith Jones said the opinion written by Rubin gives too much First Amendment protection to pornographic writings.

Administration urges dismissal of former camp prisoner's lawsuit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Monday the World War II detention of Japanese-Americans in U.S. prison camps shamed the nation, but it still urged the Supreme Court to kill a lawsuit stemming from the internment. Solicitor General Charles Fried, the administration's top-ranking courtroom lawyer, argued that "ordinary rules of law" should apply to the lawsuit "no matter how much balm we would like to apply to the wound." He said a 1983 suit, which seeks compensation for property losses suffered by those imprisoned, was filed in the wrong federal court and was filed too late. But Fried also used the administration's strongest language to date in condemning the internment, in which 120,000 U.S. citizens and resident aliens of Japanese ancestry were taken from their homes and put in concentration camps for up to four years. He called the banishment "a deplorable episode," adding, "The allies did not always adhere to the values for which they were fighting." Fried said the suffering inflicted on Japanese-Americans was based on a political judgment — "a wrong judgment" — that they could not be trusted. Fried said the internment program was tainted by "a racial caste, which was our shame." A federal appeals court ruled that the government must defend itself at trial against the property-loss claims, estimated in the billions of dollars. The Supreme Court's decision is expected by July. Although its decision may center on questions of legal jurisdiction and a statute of limitations, the case represents the court's first opportunity to comment on its own 1944 decision condoning the internment. Benjamin Zelenko, the lawyer representing those who sued the government, said his clients "seek their day in court." He urged the justices to let the lawsuit proceed. Zelenko argued that the suit was not filed too late — beyond a six-year statute of limitations written into a federal law covering such claims — because, he said, government concealment and fraud hid the government's liability until 1982. Those listening to the 60-minute argument session before the court included William Hohri, a computer programmer from Chicago who as a teen-ager was interned with his family in a California camp. Emerging from the session, Hohri criticized the administration's position. "I am sorry we have a Department of Justice we have to fight to affirm our constitutional rights," he said. "I think the justices recognize this is not the time to duck the issue. We lost our freedom, which is very precious to us." After the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in 1941, the federal government forcibly removed from their homes Japanese-Americans and Japanese citizens living in California and parts of Oregon, Washington and Arizona. Such action was authorized by President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Reagan returns from vacation, mulls Soviet arms-control offers

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, ending a 10-day California vacation, returned to Washington on Monday to consult congressional leaders about what he believes are promising arms-control negotiations with the Soviet Union. Besides meeting with top Democratic and Republican leaders this week, Reagan is expected to give instructions to his arms negotiators, who will start a new round of U.S.-Soviet talks in Geneva on Thursday. As the president and his wife, Nancy, walked across the South Lawn from their helicopter, their dog, Rex, ran to greet them, dragging his leash behind. Mrs. Reagan scooped him up in her arms and carried him inside. Reagan said over the weekend that while significant issues still divide the superpowers, "our negotiators will intensify their efforts to clear them away when talks resume in Geneva." The president sounded optimistic concerning the Soviet proposals — for removal of entire categories of nuclear weapons from Europe — made last week during Secretary of State George Shultz's three-day visit to Moscow. "When I return to Washington, I will meet with the bipartisan congressional leadership to review this week's progress," the president said in his radio address on Saturday. A House delegation, led by Speaker Jim Wright of Texas, also talked with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in Moscow last week. Congress returns from its spring recess on Tuesday. The president made clear it will be some time before a formal response can be made to the Soviets, because the NATO allies also must be consulted. "Direct consultations with our allies will continue on further negotiations and plans," Reagan said. "We must look at this issue in a calm, careful and deliberate manner."

Still, the president said after meeting with Shultz, "All I heard today is in the direction that I want to go in." The president and his wife wrapped up their Easter break on Sunday by attending services at a Presbyterian church in Santa Barbara. On Saturday, the president delivered his radio address from the 688-acre ranch and later in the day the couple met with dozens of young cancer patients at a camp in the Santa Ynez Mountains. On the ranch, the president kept up a rather busy work schedule, mixing riding and clearing brush with routine paperwork. On Friday, Reagan imposed $300 million in duties on selected Japanese electronic goods in retaliation for that nation's alleged "dumping" of computer chips in foreign markets. Shultz flew to the ranch late Thursday to brief the president on his meetings in Moscow, and Reagan spoke with reporters afterward.

Timely tune's lyrics satirize TV evangelists

LOS ANGELES (AP) — James Stevens' "Would Jesus Wear a Rolex on His Television Show?" turned out to be a timely tune for the singer of novelty songs "The Streak" and "Alab Arab." Stevens insists that Chastity and Margaret Archer were RCA Records single before the troubles of PTL leader Jim Bakker, including his extramarital sexual encounter, surfaced. The record is being released this week. The lyrics include: "Would Jesus have a second home in the Springs, but try to hide it away? Would Jesus admit he's a sinner, all those preachers who say they've been a-talking holiness?" "Would He wear a Rolex on His Wrist? Would his wife wear fur coats and diamonds? Would his dress room have a star? If he came back tomorrow, would something I'd like to know, would Jesus wear a Rolex on his television show?"

World War II Army hero dies at age 88

WASHINGTON (AP) — Maxwell D. Taylor, the World War II hero who went on to become the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam, died Sunday at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, the Pentagon announced Monday. Taylor was 85. The Pentagon statement did not give a cause of death, but Taylor was reported to have been in poor health. "Throughout his life, General Taylor epitomized what it means to be a soldier, a diplomat and a scholar," said Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger. He will be remembered as one of the great military leaders in American history," Weinberger added. Taylor, a native of Kentucky, Mo., graduated from the U.S. Military Academy at West Point in 1922. Credited with helping to develop the first airborne division of the Army, Taylor led the 101st Airborne Division in the invasion of Normandy in 1944, became the first American general to fight in France in that war.

World War II Army hero dies at age 88

Following the war, Taylor returned to the United States and became the superintendent of West Point, later serving as its 10th and then as the commanding general of the Eighth U.S. Army in South Korea during the last months of that war. Taylor assumed the Army's military position, that of chief of staff, in 1955, a position he held until his first retirement in 1961. He was recalled to active duty on July 1, 1961, and served the military representation of then-President John F. Kennedy. He was named chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff by President Lyndon B. Johnson in 1962. Taylor resigned that post in 1964 and was then appointed U.S. ambassador to South Vietnam by then President Lyndon B. Johnson. The Pentagon said the body would be held Thursday at the Myer, Va., with burial at Arlington National Cemetery.
