Early release of inmate questioned

ANGLETON (AP) — State prison officials are trying to determine why an inmate was paroled only a few months after being indicted in a prison slaying despite Brazoria County's request that he be detained. Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Charles Brown confirmed the prison file of John Thomas Williams Jr. contained information on the June 1985 stabbing death of a fellow inmate at the Darrington Unit in Rosharon.

The file should have provided for notification of Williams' impending release so Brazoria County officials could have taken him into custody, said Tom Watson, special prosecutor for prison cases in Brazoria County.

Williams was indicted on a murder charge in July 1985 and paroled in November. He is accused of stabbing Jimmy Lee Ephraim Jr., 27.

Williams was arrested Thursday without incident as he walked off a shrimp boat in Rockport, Aransas County Sheriff Bob Hewes said. Williams is in the Brazoria County Jail without bond.

"Why would they let someone like that out of prison?" said Brazoria County Sheriff Joe King, whose department investigates crimes inside state prisons in the county.

King said he can't understand why Williams was freed, since the sheriff's office had filed a request with the state prison system that he be detained.

Brown said the request in Williams' file bears no stamp indicating the date it was received. Brazoria Chief Deputy Charles Wagner said his office sent the document, which would have halted parole proceedings, on July 17.

Vietnam veteran stops off in B-CS to let residents enjoy 'traveling helicopter show'

By Audrey Cardenas Reporter

It's a bird. It's a plane. No, it's helicopter-man.

Located at FM 2818 and Texas Avenue across from K-Mart, Hugo Butz, who claims to be the only full-time barnstormer in the country, offers helicopter rides to anyone seeking fun.

"It's not just a $10 helicopter ride for four minutes," Butz says. "It's a $10 helicopter ride for four minutes — at 1,000 feet, going 80 mph."

Soloing by age 15, Butz received his pilot's license three years later. He says he's always wanted to fly.

"I used to build model airplanes when I was a kid," he says, "and that's when I became interested in flying."

He got his chance to fly in 1967 when he was stationed in Chu Lai, Vietnam, for two years. After the war, Butz spent two years flying in Peru moving oil equipment for oil companies and then came back to the States to become a logger.

In 1984, Butz decided he wanted to barnstorm, a type of flying fashioned after early aviators who toured the country giving airplane rides.

"I've always got my eye on the horizon," he says, "and I like meeting people."

But on the first day of his new venture, this 39-year-old pilot suffered $20,000 worth of damage to his helicopter when a truck ran into the chopper, which was parked on a trailer outside Butz's condominium.

"There were a lot of obstacles not easy to deal with, but I accepted them," he says. "Of course, I say that three years later."

Butz, who travels from town to town selling rides in his helicopter, has found everyone to be supportive of his nostalgic idea.

"Everybody likes me for what I'm doing," he says, "and I like sharing it with everybody."

And sharing it he does. On a good day, Butz flies about 200 people and finds most of them to be quite generous.

"My customers are usually upbeat and looking for something to make them happy," he says. "They see what I do as a novel thing."

Some of Butz's customers have traded him pizzas, clothes, soft drinks and cakes for a ride in his chopper.

"I'm a barnstormer, and I trade anything for rides," he says.

Despite the ride's popularity, some people think that Butz charges too much for four minutes of flying, but he offers a sincere rebuttal.

"You can buy a kid a $10 toy and three days later it's broken or lost," he says. "But buy him a helicopter ride and when he's 21, he'll still remember what the weather was like on that day."

Butz, who flies south in the winter and north in the summer, selects his locations by choosing a direction in which he would like to travel, then looking on a map and circling those towns that fall into his ideal population range, which is 10,000-25,000 people.

"I circle the towns on an atlas and head for the nearest one," he explained. "If I get a good feel of the town, then I'll usually stay and fly."

Once in a town, he looks for a location to set up his equipment, con-his first helicopter ride with Butz.

"My dad says he's the best pilot he's ever seen, and I agree with him," he says. "I felt really safe."

Leon Echard, a city worker, agrees with Newman.

"I liked it," he says. "I've never been in a helicopter before. It was a different experience."

Like his fun-seeking customers,

"It's not just a $10 helicopter ride for four minutes. It's a $10 helicopter ride for four minutes — at 1,000 feet, going 80 mph."

— Hugo Butz

tacts the owner of the site and usually begins flying that day, he says.

Although he is not bound to a particular flight pattern, he says he flies a specified route to avoid residential complaints.

Besides avoiding complaints, the barnstormer also avoids accidents.

"I haven't had any emergencies when giving rides," he says. "Once, when I was putting the helicopter on the trailer, I almost flipped it, but I was by myself."

Murray Newman, son of Louis Newman III, who served with Butz in Vietnam, says he wasn't scared on Butz also has had some different experiences while barnstorming. He says that twice he has been asked by police in different towns to help them locate criminals, but Butz had no success in either situation.

Although Butz says he has been on the front page of every newspaper in every town he's flown in and also has made several TV appearances, he doesn't think he is the star of his show.

"It doesn't revolve around me," he says. "It's about a certain part of a person and his fascination with helicopters."

Congressmen argue over hospital funding for Fort Sam Houston

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The battle for a replacement for Brooke Army Medical Center continues as Texas congressmen feud over a proposed amendment that critics say could cost the city $250 million in federal funds.

Ground is scheduled to be broken in September for a new 200-bed facility at Fort Sam Houston.

The facility, which would replace the current 700-bed hospital, could be expanded to 450 beds.

About $135 million has been authorized for the project, which also would place Brooke and the Air Force's Wilford Hall Medical Center under a joint command.

But on Monday, Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, introduced an amendment to a substitute Defense Department authorization bill.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, who worked with Aspin on the amendment, said Monday that the amendment calls for a return to a permanent 450-bed facility.

"This doesn't stop anything," said Gonzalez, D-San Antonio. "We need time to re-view this dispassionately and calmly, which hasn't been done at this time."

"I'm saying, 'Let's stop and re-evaluate and see where we're heading.' We're not building anything new anyway."

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, criticized the amendment proposal.

"Such an action would cost San Antonio a quarter of a billion dollars," Gramm said. "I cannot believe such a loss is in the interests of the active duty military personnel of military retirees in San Antonio."

Pentagon officials say the facility would cost at least $241 million.

San Antonio congressmen were upset about the proposal, saying $135 million authorized for the hospital could be wiped out if it becomes law.

Rep. Albert Bustamante, a member of the House Armed Services Committee, said he was not concerned about the amendment and that he was concerned about its cost.

Rep. Lamar Smith, a Republican, said the action could hurt 35,000 military retirees in his, Gonzalez' and Bustamante's districts.

Gonzalez said Gramm already had lost $400 million headed for Brooke by agreeing to the compromise of a 200-bed expandable hospital this summer.
