Senate confirms selection of Webster as head of CIA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Tuesday overwhelmingly confirmed FBI Director William Webster as the 14th head of the Central Intelligence Agency, succeeding the late William Casey.

Webster, who in his nearly 10 years as FBI director has built an excellent working relationship with members of Congress, was praised as a director likely to repair damaged relations between Congress and the CIA growing out of the Iran-Contra affair.

The vote was 94 to 1 for confirmation, with Sen. Harry Reid, D-Nev., voting against the nomination.

The Senate Intelligence Committee earlier recommended unanimously that he be approved for the CIA directorship.

Webster takes over the CIA at a particularly sensitive time in the history of the agency, when its role in the Iran-Contra affair has become the focus of much of the testimony in congressional hearings into the scandal.

In confirmation hearings before the intelligence committee last month, the FBI director pledged to keep members of congressional oversight committees fully informed of CIA activities.

Casey, who resigned as head of the CIA on Jan. 29, after undergoing surgery for a cancerous brain tumor, died May 6.

Casey was the first director of central intelligence to be given Cabinet rank, and he used his influence within the Reagan administration to support the covert sale of arms to Iran, without informing Congress. Supplying weapons to Iran was contrary to U.S. policy.

Casey also was instrumental in the development of the Nicaraguan Contras as a fighting force against the leftist Sandinista government.

President Reagan's chief of staff, Marlin Fitzwater, called the confirmation of Webster a "major triumph for the country and the administration." "At this crucial juncture in world affairs, we need thoughtful and strong leadership at the helm," he said.

In another development, the CIA director Tuesday named Majority Leader Robert D. Work, R-Va., to succeed him as deputy director of central intelligence. Work's appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

Byrd, noting that the director of the FBI and other agencies serve fixed terms, said "it is the duty of the director and deputy director of central intelligence to be on the list."

Models' chaperones found slain; FBI arrests, charges man in case

SOUTH LAKE TAHOE, Calif. (AP) — FBI agents rescued two terrified teen-age models and arrested a man who had allegedly kidnapped them and killed their two chaperones, authorities said Tuesday.

Herbert James Coddington, 28, who allegedly hired the girls on the pretext of filming an anti-drug video, was arrested late Monday and booked for investigation of murder and kidnapping, agent Terry Knowles told a news conference.

He said the two girls were found apparently unharmed but "scared to death" in one bedroom. The bodies of the two women were in plastic bags on the floor of the master bedroom.

Alecia Thoma, 14, and Monica Berge, 12, who vanished Saturday, were not bound and "it was a fair assumption" that they were present during the slayings, Knowles said.

Gaynel Wadsworth, who was hired for another modeling agency, her firm turned Coddington in last week.

"He was very shady, shady, sweaty," she said. "He never met me in the face."

She said the man told her he wanted two teen-age girls and came nervous when he saw models' parents are sent with the girls.
