Pope's visit to Poland draws Solidarity chants

KRAKOW, Poland (AP) — Police fired tear gas to disperse thousands of anti-government protesters chanting "Solidarity will win!" Wednesday after Pope John Paul II spoke out forcefully in favor of the outlawed labor union.

The pope, who has called for calm and restraint during his third pilgrimage to his homeland, also announced that Moscow had barred him from visiting the Soviet republic of Lithuania this year.

Officials said some demonstrators threw stones and smoke bombs and a policeman was seriously injured. Several youths were detained.

"We want Lech, not Wojciech," chanted about 3,000 people protesting near Wawel Cathedral, where the pope was saying Mass. The demonstrators were among a huge crowd that walked to the cathedral from a field where the pope had just addressed about a million people.

The chant referred to Polish Communist leader Wojciech Jaruzelski and Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, who is expected to meet with the pope on Thursday in Gdansk.

Many of the demonstrators waved red-and-white Solidarity banners and chanted, "We want to get near the pope."

Witnesses said they saw police wielding their clubs to hold back the demonstrators but that they did not see any beatings. They also said the police shot tear gas and smoke bombs from pistols and set off shock bombs that created deafening noises without injuring anyone.

Earlier, in the southeastern city of Tarnow, John Paul called on the government to honor its agreements with the rural Solidarity movement, which, like its urban counterpart, is banned by the Communist government. The pontiff declared that supply-starved private farmers must be elevated from "second-class status."

The pontiff, whose 1979 trip to Poland is credited with sparking the birth of Solidarity, ended the third day of his Polish visit with an unscheduled late-night appearance on the balcony of the Krakow archbishop's residence before several thousand people gathered in the street below.

"When I came here in 1979, I knew what to tell you," the pope said in reference to his first visit to his homeland after becoming pope. "But I don't know what to tell you today."

He told the crowd to have "solidarity" with each other, but he was using the word in its original sense.

In his address at the Krakow earlier, the pope said, "We must succumb to depression." He urged them "to struggle patiently for the preservation of peace and freedom."

Later, during a homily in the ornate Wawel Cathedral at the former seat of Polish royalty, the pope noted that "Solidarity" marks the 600th anniversary of Lithuania's ties to them (the Lithuanians) in this jubilee year to pray on their soil and in their tongue.

There has been widespread speculation about a possible papal visit to the Soviet Union next year, the 1,000th anniversary of Christianity's introduction there.

Crowds battle with police as protests sweep S. Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Crowds chanting "Democracy!" swept through city streets Wednesday, fighting police with firebombs and fists in the largest anti-government protest since President Chun Doo-hwan took power in 1980.

Tens of thousands of protesters in Seoul and at least 19 other cities attacked government buildings and police stations, ripped up sidewalks for ammunition, beat policemen and tore off their uniforms.

Hundreds of people were injured and hundreds more arrested, but police would not give definite figures.

Many onlookers and motorists cheered the protesters, who timed their street demonstrations to coincide with a meeting of Chun's political party that endorsed the president's chosen successor.

"Kill me!" an elderly man screamed as he tried to hurl himself against a line of riot police wearing green combat uniforms and black-visored helmets. "Why don't you kill me?"

Outraged bystanders caught in the fights yelled abuse at police, and crowds cheered when women attempted to slap officers.

Running battles raged through the broad streets of Seoul's main shopping and business districts, on the edge of the government ministry area and around the main hotels patronized by Westerners.

There were hand-to-hand clashes with riot clubs. Several police units were overrun by the protesters shouting "Down with the military dictatorship!"

Street battles lasted several hours in Seoul, and clashes still were reported after midnight.

Observers said it was the greatest outpouring of opposition to Chun's administration since he came to power as an army general after the assassination of President Park Chung-hee.

Opposition groups had called for nationwide protests to demand that the ruling Democratic Justice Party cancel its convention. The meeting was held at the party accepted Chun's choice of close political ally, Tae-woo, also a former general, to succeed him in January.

Roh praised Chun and promised to continue liberal, authoritarian policies, warning the opposition: "Only I breeds violence."

Seoul's central district echoed with the roar of thousands of protesters chanting slogans and the exploding tear gas grenades.

Korean Broadcasting System, the state-run news agency said about 2,000 people were arrested, but the number appeared to be low.

Botha renews state of emergency in troubled South African nation

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — President P.W. Botha said Wednesday he had renewed a national state of emergency that during the past year has given police wide powers to crack down on people protesting apartheid.

"Considering the safety of the public and the maintenance of public order, I have decided to proclaim a state of emergency once more in the whole of the republic, including the self-governing national states (black tribal homelands)," Botha told Parliament in a speech he repeated on national television. "I have already signed the documents in this connection."

Botha's June 12, 1986, state-of-emergency decree and a series of related regulations empowering police to restrict freedom of speech, press and assembly were due to expire at midnight Thursday. The new decree legally extends the state of emergency for up to a year.

By law and custom, apartheid establishes a racially segregated society in which South Africa's 24 million blacks have no vote in national affairs. The 5 million whites control the economy and maintain separate districts, schools and health services.

Botha said the background "against which deeds of violence and unrest were being planned and executed" last June still exists.

When Botha declared the emergency last year, he cited statistics on increases in public violence. More than 20,000 people have been detained without charge since then, and the government indicated earlier this month that just over 3,000 were still being held.

The Detainees Parents Support Committee reported a few hours before Botha's Parliament speech that a large number of black community leaders had been released from de-attention Wednesday without explanation.

Some legal experts said that one detained under the emergency would have to be released, but that they could be immediately detained again and did not necessarily have to be freed.

Many provisions of the emergency regulations have been challenged in court over the past year and some sections have been overturned. The government was expected to rewrite portions of the emergency regulations to meet courts' objections and tighten restrictions in some cases.

The government has succeeded in sharply reducing unrest in the year through mass detentions of black activists, militants and heavy security force presence in townships and other measures.
