Charlie's closes down; business sold o adjacent bookstore for expansion

By Kirsten Dietz Senior Staff Writer

Trading Blue Bell for books, J.E. "Charlie" Robbins didn't move far when Charlie's Grocery closed Friday.

In fact, he moved only one door down, beginning work in the shipping and receiving department at the place that bought him out — the Texas Aggie Bookstore.

Robbins says the decision to sell the grocery, which he and his wife Mildred owned and ran for 24 years, was made in December on the spur of the moment. He said he and his wife felt they had worked hard for many years and deserved an early retirement.

"We got the notion we should do the things we wanted to do,"

John Raney, owner of the Texas Aggie Bookstore, said he wanted to expand the store because Texas A&M's enrollment is expected to increase by several thousand in the fall. The addition, now being remodeled, will open in August, Raney said. The grocery, practically an A&M tradition, was opened by Charlie Opersteny in 1933. The store, one of two at Northgate at the time, got most of its business from credit orders taken by

After World War II, married students living in Walton Hall frequented the grocery, which moved to its last location in 1949. At the time of its closing, Charlie's catered almost exclusively to students. Blue Bell ice

CS Council plans return of almost $200,000 in unused funds to federal housing authority

By Yvonne DeGraw Staff Writer

The College Station City Council volunteered hursday to return $198,340.19 in unused funds

The grant from the U.S. Department of Housng and Urban Development was intended to and rehabilitation of rental units with low- or oderate-income tenants. Only $10,000 was disbuted by the city during the last year. By returning the funds now, the city keeps the ght to apply for more funds next year. The oney would have been taken from the city in ptember in any case. Council members asked Dan Fette, community evelopment director, why the funds went

Fette said another federal program — created cash flow. The one-year guarantee provided by the HUD program compares poorly to this 15-year plan, especially when developers ask local banks for funding, he said. Three local projects fell through this year because of this.

Several other actions were taken by the Council and its members:

Mayor Larry Ringer proclaimed Saturday
 "Just So No" to Alcohol and Drug Abuse Day.
 The mayors of Bryan and College Station will open a rally that day at 10 a.m. in College Station

• The Council approved a payment of $100,000 to Texas A&M University. The money will be used for capital improvements to Easterwood Airport.

• Two low bids for the construction of Cy Miller Park were approved. The park, on Texas

Avenue at the Old Police Pond, will cost about $69,000. It will include a pond, two wooden piers and a pavilion.

• The Council approved a budget for distributing $751,000 of community development funds. This is $272,700 less than the amount distributed last year. Eight more programs than last ear will be funded, so the money will be spread thinner in some areas.

Members expressed concern over proposed budget increases by the Brazos County Central Appraisal District. College Station has frozen sal-aries and cut positions, but the appraisal district budget does the opposite.

• Councilman Dick Haddox said the successful Adopt-a-Highway program has been extended to streets inside city limits. Groups interested in adopting a street should contact Joyce

New T-Camp offers transfer students unique opportunity to make friends, become acquainted with A&M traditions

By Alan Sembera Reporter

Before this year, students trans-ering to Texas A&M didn't have the enefit of Fish Camp to indoctrinate hem to A&M's traditions and give hem a helping hand in making new

The Student Y Association's T-Camp, an orientation camp for transfer students, will take place Aug. 27-29.
T-Camp will be held at Camp Hoblitzelle, a Salvation Army camp out 180 miles from College Sta-

David Mendoza, student director

Mendoza said that on the first y, students will be divided into our smaller camps which will discuss topics such as traditions; stu-dent involvement, adjustment to A&M life and alcohol and drugs.

There also will be smaller disthe camp, said about 200 students cussion groups formed so students ill be accepted to the camp on a can talk to a counselor on a one-to-one basis, Mendoza said. Optional programs designed to help the stu-dents with other aspects of student life, such as personal budgeting and living arrangements, also will be of-

On the second day, Mendoza said, there will be sports and recreational

There is a need for this type of camp at A&M, he said, because many transfer students never learn about the traditions here or what the social life is like.

"For the longest time, there's been a need for an extra orientation event for transfer students," Mendoza said. "Freshmen had their freshman orientation conference, and they also had Fish Camp. Transfer students had a transfer orientation during the summer, but other than that, they had nothing."

Mendoza said a lot of transfer students who knew about Fish Camp always wondered why there wasn't a camp for transfer students.

"I know while working as a peeradvisor last year I had no answer for that, because it sounded like a logical idea," he said.

Jan Paterson, advisor to T-Camp, said although the idea for this camp came from the Fish Camp idea, it is not a Fish Camp for transfer stu-

"The program is trying to stand on its own two feet," Paterson said. "We're trying to serve a different population, so the program format will be a bit different than it would be for a freshman.

Transfer students, on the whole, are older students, and they've already been to a school. These are students who are coming perhaps from a junior college, where they had a very good experience. They are not going to accept well us put-ting down other schools."
