Officials want assault suspect to get AIDS test

HOUSTON (AP) — A state district judge set a hearing for Monday to determine whether a man charged with sexually assaulting a 15-year-old boy can be forced to take an AIDS test.

The Harris County district attorney's office is seeking a court order to force Clarence Gerald Shelvin to submit to an AIDS test at the request of the Houston Police Department.

Shelvin, 26, was arrested July 2 and charged with aggravated sexual assault in an alleged attack on the teen-ager, police spokesman Al Baker said. Shelvin's bond was set at $50,000, and he remains in the Harris County Jail.

More charges may be filed against Shelvin before his July 25 arraignment because police spokesman J.C. Mosier said investigators believe Shelvin may have assaulted as many as 12 boys between the ages of 14 and 18.

Shelvin has not been asked if he would take the AIDS test voluntarily, Coffee said Wednesday.

"He might not voluntarily submit, but he won't have a choice," Coffee said. "It does not violate his Fifth Amendment rights."

Coffee said he was confident the court would issue the order because previous courts have ordered similar tests for suspects in recent years.

Blood tests are routinely ordered to determine whether a suspect's blood matches that of semen used as evidence in sex crimes, Coffee said.

Police say they believe this is the first time the department has asked to force a suspect to have an AIDS test. Harris County prosecutors say other sex crime suspects have been tested in the past six to eight months.

Police asked for the AIDS test "strictly as a preventive measure... There is no evidence he has AIDS," Mosier said.

Shelvin had been out of prison for less than two months when the attack allegedly occurred. He had been paroled after serving six years of a 16-year combined sentence for burglary and sexual assault of another child, police said.

Three additional tests of redesigned rocket added to NASA plan

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Three additional full-scale tests of a redesigned solid rocket engine have been added to the space shuttle recovery program, a NASA manager announced Thursday.

John Thomas, manager of the team that is redesigning the engines that caused the Challenger accident, said the three new tests were added after some astronauts and a National Research Council committee recommended that more test firings be done on the new engines.

The additions bring to a total of eight the firings planned with the redesigned rocket.

Thomas said he hopes to get all three of the additional tests performed before shuttle flights resume next June, but that the schedule "exceptionally tight."

"The three extra tests are mandatory before the next flight," he said. "We expect to get at least two of the three, but hopefully get all three."

Challenger exploded and killed seven-member crew on Jan. 28, after one of two solid rocket boosters leaked flame and caused a fuel tank to burst shortly after launch.

A presidential commission blamed the accident on a flawed sign in joints and O-ring seals of solid rocket booster manufactured by Morton Thiokol.

Thomas and a team of NASA Thiokol engineers have corrected the flaws in the rocket joint and conduct full-scale tests to prove new design at the Thiokol plant in Brigham City, Utah.

Texas senators celebrating OK of windfall tax repeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Washington's oil gladiators in the Senate and administration joined to successfully push through repeal of the Windfall Profits Tax as part of the omnibus trade bill early Thursday.

Oil state senators, led by Phil Gramm, R-Texas and David Boren, D-Oklahoma, were joined by Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III in pushing the debate, which began Wednesday afternoon and ended just after midnight.

"We won big," Gramm told a news conference hours after the Senate vote. "Whether it's going to get it over the top we'll have to wait and see."

Last year the Senate passed a similar measure, which languished in the House and finally died in conference.

"To see it pass with that kind of bipartisan support was most heartening," said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, and chairman of the Finance Committee, who managed the omnibus trade bill.

However, Bentsen was not overly optimistic, and released a statement in which he predicted "substantial opposition from the House side."

"I anticipate a tough fight in the conference committee as we try to convince the House to keep the repeal provision on the trade bill, but we have a real shot at getting this tax repealed," Bentsen said.

Bentsen said he would be talking with Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, chairman of the House Ways and Means committee, which has jurisdiction in the House, about its chances in conference. Rostenkowski, D-Ill., will be the key vote in the conference, he said.

Treasury Secretary Baker, a Houston businessman who is a personal friend of Bentsen's, said he joined in the lobbying effort for repeal of the tax Wednesday, after calling several Republican senators about the vote.

"We were clearly in cooperation on the Windfall Profits Tax vote last night," said Baker, referring to Bentsen. "We were both in control last night tying down votes."

If the repeal survives a House-Senate conference committee, signed by the president, supporters say it would increase confidence in the oil industry, fostering more loans for further domestic exploration.

The measure would lift a 1980 tax on oil that started kicking in when crude oil hit $19 a barrel.

Official: Budget proposal to force school districts to increase taxes

AUSTIN (AP) — The budget agreement worked out by state leaders would force school districts to raise property taxes to make up for decreased state funds, a Texas Association of School Boards official said Thursday.

But Speaker Gib Lewis, disputing that claim, said some school boards might use the change as an excuse to pass unnecessary tax increases.

Lewis, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Gov. Bill Clements have agreed to a $38.3 billion 1988-89 state budget that would make school districts pay for 34.8 percent of their costs. Under the current formula, districts pay 33.3 percent, with the rest coming from state and federal funds.

Overall state funds for public education would go up in the proposed budget, but the change in the funding formula would cut about $170 million from state funds for local school districts.

"I think legislators know that a cut in public education will have a direct impact on local property taxes," said James Crow, director of governmental relations for the Texas Association of School Boards. "They are simply shifting the tax burden from the state level to the local property tax level."

He said school districts actually need $430 million more in state money to cover student enrollment growth through 1989. Crow also said one Texas Education Agency committee study shows that state funds are now $2.9 billion short of the amount needed to do everything the state requires schools to do.

"You ask me, 'Can't you find the $170 million in current programs?' " he said. "Some districts probably could. Many districts couldn't."

Larry Yawn, assistant superintendent for governmental relations for the Houston Independent School District, said the change will cost his district up to $1 million a year. HISD, the state's largest school district, now gets about $250 million a year in state money.

But Lewis said actions taken by the Legislature would not have to guarantee local tax hikes.

"The fear that we have many times, which has borne out many times, is that many local taxing entities use action of the Legislature as a crutch, as an excuse to increase their taxes," he said.
