UT system campuses to drop connection with religious courses

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas campuses will drop any official connection with Bible courses taught by instructors who are selected or paid by religious groups, officials said.

The change stems from a legal opinion Attorney General Jim Mattox issued last May, and UT presidents were notified of the policy this week, said James Duncan, executive vice chancellor for academic affairs.

The Bible courses were being offered at three UT campuses — Aus-

Thief takes gear; baseball team begs for bats

HOUSTON (AP) — The Orange all-star baseball team had to beg and borrow bats, gloves and cleats for a championship tournament because the car carrying their equipment was stolen from a hotel parking lot.

Team members said much of the $1,500 worth of equipment stolen Tuesday had sentimental value and had been "broken in" after more than 70 games. Luckily, some of the boys had taken their equipment to their rooms.

"I had a first baseman's mitt that was personal to me because it was my dad's when he played in high school," said Ronnie Teaff, 14. "I also had a pitching glove, some shoes, some batting gloves and a bat bag."

Howard Dobson, 14, said he lost three gloves and an orange Louisville Slugger — a bat worth $100.

When parent sponsors discovered the car missing from a northwest hotel parking lot Tuesday morning, they immediately began scrambling for replacement equipment for the Texas Pony Sectional Tournament game that night.

But rain postponed the game until Wednesday night.

Teaff's father, Ron, owner of the car, said the team's coach drove back to Orange to borrow replacement equipment.

The car still was missing Wednesday afternoon, police Lt. Bob Martin said.

tin, Arlington and El Paso — when the UT system asked for Mattox's opinion. Now, transfer credit will be limited to religious studies courses offered by accredited institutions, Duncan said.

William Hilgers, an Austin attorney for Friends of the Biblical Tradition, a group that supports continuing the courses, said he thinks the UT system has misinterpreted Mattox's opinion.

Under procedures dating to 1919, UT-Austin has offered credit for courses taught by instructors who hold chairs affiliated with the Biblical Studies Association, an off-campus, interdenominational group.

Chair-holders have been approved by UT-Austin, but paid by denominations that belong to the BSA. The instructors aren't considered faculty members, but are listed in the campus directory and have faculty identification cards.

Similar Bible courses have been offered at UT-El Paso and UT-Arlington, as well as at a dozen or more other state universities, but how the courses are administered varies at each campus.

The attorney general's opinion said state universities may continue to give credit for religion courses offered by religious organizations if the universities "operate within constitutional guidelines."

The opinion said those guidelines include requirements that the courses be secular in nature, do not "advance or inhibit religion," and "be offered in a manner that avoids excessive entanglement between government and religion."

"It would be unfortunate if controversy over the professional status of these outside religious studies instructors were placed above the value of the programs to students," Mattox wrote.

Duncan's letter to the UT presidents rules out the option of giving credit for the courses after they are separated from the universities.

"While we appreciate the alternatives detailed by the attorney general as legally permissible, one of the preferred solutions, the grant of transfer credit for a course offered by a religious organization, is not available to components of the University of Texas System," Duncan wrote.
