A&M to dedicate new alumni center

The Clayton W. Williams Jr. Alumni Center will be dedicated 10 a.m. Saturday at the plaza in front of the building on the corner of Jersey and Houston streets.

Williams, Class of '54 and owner of ClayDesta Communications, contributed $2.5 million for the $7 million center that has been under construction since March 1984.

Williams is scheduled to speak at the ceremony along with President Frank E. Vandiver and W. Mike Baggett, Class of '68 and president of the Texas A&M Association of Former Students. David Eller, chairman of the A&M Board of Regents, also will speak. Jim Jeter, associate executive director of the former students' association, encourages everyone to attend and enjoy refreshments and tours of the building until gametime at 7 p.m.

The 60,000-square-foot building houses offices, conference rooms, the Glitsch Library, Aggie ring collection and the Great Hall, a large reception area.

Jeter said the alumni center is the largest of its kind in the country and probably the most tastefully decorated.

The building is decorated in marble, granite, brass, mahogany and other fine woods. Many of the materials and furniture were donated or made by the University's more than 130,000-strong alumni association.

Officials in Austin sign tentative agreement with power company

AUSTIN (AP) — The city of Austin and Houston Lighting & Power Co. signed a tentative agreement Thursday in which the city's 16 percent share of the South Texas Nuclear Project would be swapped to the utility company.

In return, Austin would get about $63 million and power from an HL&P coal-fueled electricity plant in Limestone County. The agreement requires the city to drop its lawsuit against the company.

Austinites voted in 1981 to get rid of the city's share of the overdue and overbudget plant under construction near Bay City.

"The most important part of this agreement is the fact that we are getting 400 megawatts of power, which is exactly what we had counted on getting out of the South Texas Nuclear Project," Mayor Frank Cooksey said after the city council approved what he called a "conceptual framework" for a final agreement.

"The next valuable asset we're getting, which is a very difficult thing to calculate, is the advantage that we'll have from being out of the project," Cooksey said.

HL&P is the managing partner for the project. Austin, San Antonio and Central Power & Light Co. of Corpus Christi are the other partners. Austin's lawsuit claims HL&P has mismanaged the plant.

The tentative agreement is subject to approval from the other partners, the Texas Public Utility Commission and the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Cooksey said Austin and HL&P also have final details to work out.

In addition to the swap of Austin's interest in the STNP for the share of the Limestone plan and the city's promise to drop the lawsuit, terms of the tentative agreement include:

- HL&P would assume Austin's STNP payments, which now total $2.5 million a week. The company also would pay the city $19.7 million to cover construction costs incurred during negotiations and $30 million for Austin's nuclear fuel.

- Austin would assume proportionate costs of operating the Limestone County plant.

- HL&P would pay Austin $12 million to cover the city's legal costs in the pending lawsuit.

- Austin would refrain from "any negative actions related to the licensability and public reputation and integrity" of the plant.

In Houston, HL&P Chairman Don Jordan called the agreement a good one for both sides.

"It gives the city of Austin the opportunity to get out of the nuclear investment in South Texas, which is something they've long wanted to do," he said. "It gives us the opportunity to provide for our customers 400 megawatts of additional capacity using low-cost nuclear fuel. We believe that it will work out to be a situation where our customers will benefit in the amount of over $1 billion over the life that plant in cheaper electric service costs."

According to Hugh Rice Kelly, an HL&P attorney, Austin has about $760 million invested in the plant. The city will get cash and electricity worth $600 million to $700 million under the tentative agreement, he said. The total cost of the plant will be $5.5 billion, Jordan said.

Organizers choose Houston for first presidential debate

HOUSTON (AP) — The producer of the first scheduled Republican presidential candidate debate said Thursday that the event would be held in Houston's new George R. Brown Convention Center.

Warren Steibel of New York, producer of "Firing Line," the public television show sponsoring the debate, said negotiations on the site were completed Wednesday.

All six 1988 GOP presidential aspirants have agreed to the appearance.

It will be aired nationwide October 28 through the Public Broadcasting Service, he said.

"It will definitely be in Houston and we are delighted," Steibel said.

Steibel met Wednesday with representatives of the city and J.I. Case Co., which already has contracted for use of the center that day, but readily agreed to allow use of an auditorium in the building for the debate.

The producer said he had been leaning toward Jones Hall as the debate site but was convinced by some civic leaders to showcase the Brown Center, which will open September 26.

The debate stirred controversy recently when Vice President George Bush declined to participate in his hometown, with his strategists claiming the debate was too early.

Bush later relented.

Bush's oponents had criticized him, claiming the vice president was trying to delay the first debate to enhance his position as front-runner.

The debate has been rescheduled twice, most recently at the request of Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas.

A&M employees, don't lose your right to choose!

Traditional medical insurance offers one key advantage no clinic-based HMO can match — freedom of choice.

Joining an HMO means surrendering the right to choose your own doctor from among all the physicians in an area. Since clinic-based HMOs pay only for visits to physicians employed by the HMO, joining such a health plan significantly restricts your access to the community's full spectrum of health care providers.

The same is true of hospitals. Clinic-based HMOs pay for hospitalization only at participating hospitals. So your ability to seek cancer therapy at Houston's M.D. Anderson Hospital, or cardiac surgery at St. Luke's, is similarly restricted.

Add to those limitations the loss of all dental coverage and most psychiatric benefits, and the true cost of HMO participation becomes apparent.

Before you abandon your proven medical insurance for the latest trend in health care delivery, be sure you know all the facts.
