Gramm supports effort to bring biotechnology center to Texas

By Drew Leder
Staff Writer

Sen. Phil Gramm expressed his support of the effort to bring a national biotechnology center to Texas in a briefing to the Texas A&M Board of Regents Saturday afternoon.

Dr. Robert Stone, the director of Texas A&M's Institute of Biosciences and Technology, gave a briefing to Gramm, U.S. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Ennis, and state Rep. Richard Smith, R-Bryan, about a plan developed by Stone and other members of the institute to make Texas the nation's leader in biotechnology research and bring in many new jobs.

The institute's plan entails the building of two research facilities in the Texas Medical Center in Houston, a large expansion in research capability through federal funding and a partnership among A&M and 37 other institutions within the medical center, Stone said.

The focus of the research will be on human nutrition, bioengineering, comparative veterinary medicine and biotechnology, which is expected to be a $200 billion industry by the year 2000.

Board of Regents chairman David Eller, also present at the briefing, compared the expected growth in biotechnology over the next 13 years to the growth in the computer industry in the past 15 years.

Obtaining the desired $50 million in funds for the program will require an appropriation by the U.S. Congress, beginning with $50,000 for a feasibility study which will be undertaken by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the institute.

Getting the appropriation will involve competition from other states wanting to fund their own projects.

Barton said when Congress recessed in early August there had been project proposals from other states but no similar proposals. He also said he was confident that the institute would receive the money for a feasibility study in 1988. Stone said if the institute acquire the initial funding for the study, he is convinced Congress then see the "richness of the proposal. Even though other states are to make similar proposals, Texas' proposal is circulated in Congress, Gramm said, he Texas will still have a good chance getting funds for the project. "We're starting early enough enough advantages . . . to win up on merit," he said, "and committed to winning." The advantages Gramm sees to are in the form of an advanced research effort in biotechnology A&M, the medical center and state institutions and the potential for a joint effort among these institutions.

Eller also expressed confidence in Texas' chances. "There won't be anybody else can offer this type of research technology," Eller said.

The United States, at present leads the world in biotechnology thin margin over Japan. The biotechnology research centers Massachusetts, California and the Gulf Coast, Eller said, but of these have the extensive capabilities the institute will bring to Texas.

Gramm said he will meet Wednesday with Department of Agriculture representatives to discuss the proposal with them. He would like the institute to present to the Texas Congressional Delegation in order to gain state-wide support for the project.

DPS marks casualties of Texas roads during holiday weekend at 14 deaths

(AP) — Fourteen people, including three pedestrians and two bicycle riders, have died on Texas highways so far during the Labor Day holiday weekend, Department of Public Safety officials said Sunday.

The DPS predicts there will be 42 deaths in the period, which runs from 6 p.m. Friday to midnight Monday.

The latest reported accidents include one involving Lorenzo Aguilar, 16, of Lockhart, who died at about 7 p.m. Saturday from injuries he suffered after his bicycle collided with a car, DPS spokesman Mike Cox said.

The collision occurred Friday evening on Texas Highway 142 in Lockhart, he said.

Edward Newton Phillips, 43, of Longview, died at 12:07 a.m. Sunday from injuries he suffered when the car he was driving collided with a tractor-trailer rig on Loop 281 just east of Longview late Saturday night.

Tynna N. Cerventes, 15, of Refugio, died at 12:10 a.m. Sunday from injuries she suffered when the bicycle she was riding collided with a vehicle in Refugio at about 8:30 p.m. Saturday.

The driver of the car left the scene but was later arrested, Cox said.

The driver is being held in Refugio on charges of driving while intoxicated, Cox said.

Angelia Denise Hunt, 21, of Longview, a pedestrian, died early Sunday morning when she was struck by a vehicle on a Longview street.

Cox said there have been few statistically significant changes in the types of accidents because of the new 65-mile-an-hour speed limit.

"You never really see any real rhyme or reason to it," he said. "What you usually see is sort of unusual things," he said.

"Out of four accidents, two of them involved somebody on a bicycle and one of them was somebody afoot," Cox said.

Other fatalities include 19-year-old Benjamin Huber of Austin.

Huber died in a one-vehicle accident in northwest Austin early Saturday.

Rebecca M. Myers, 21, of Houston was killed in a head-on collision before noon Saturday on Highway 71, about five miles east of Columbus in Colorado County.

Three others were injured in accidents.

Eight other people have had accidents during the holiday weekend.

The toll predicted this slightly lower than the 48 predicted for the 78-hour period in 1986.

Last year, 38 of the 51 traffic deaths were the result of accidents in which drunken drivers were a factor, DPS director Leo

To beef up enforcement, the DPS assigned extra troopers to the highways during the Day weekend.

Tarrant County Jail receives order for expanded facility

FORT WORTH (AP) — Tarrant County Jail cells built for 15 people are often crammed with more than two dozen inmates, some sleeping on the concrete floors of the state's most overcrowded jail.

"It's hell," Bill Broome, the newly hired jail administrator said of the conditions at the jail. "I'll tell you that right now."

The Texas Commission on Jail Standards has given Tarrant County until Sept. 23 to provide a bunk for every inmate or face an order forcing the transfer of excess inmates to other county jails, at a cost of $11,000 a day.

With an average population of 1,692 prisoners a day, the Tarrant County Jail is bursting at the seams. The jail averages 284 prisoners over capacity, and nearly 500 more than the number state regulators say it should have.

Tarrant County's overcrowding exceeds that of any other Texas county, according to a survey by the Dallas Times Herald and statistics from the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

Inmates complain of being crammed for up to 22 hours inside hot, stuffy holding cells with as many as 40 other inmates — more than double the cell's capacity.

Other complaints include long waits to see a doctor or to get prescription medicine, a shortage of sanitary napkins for female prisoners, a lack of supervision and not enough bunks.

Steve Howell, 29, who awaits trial for burglary in the county jail, said, "I've seen people's heads gashed open, people stabbed with pencils, pens, whatever people can get hold of. I've seen people molested in this place."

Long-term expansion of the jail, approved by voters in April as part of a $114 million bond package, has been a high priority. But officials only recently decided where to build a new 1,248-bed maximum security jail, and completion is at least three years away.

Jack Payton, a 38-year-old General Motors worker, called his four days in the Tarrant County Jail last June his worst experience since combat in Vietnam.

"Seeing the guys doing things and how they were treated, I thought, 'This is war,'" Payton, who was arrested on charges of trying to cash a forged check, said. "Just survive it the best way that you can."

Another man, Kim Dexter Black, spent 83 days in the jail waiting to come to trial on charges of carrying a club. Black, who lives in Everman, called his three-month tenure in the county lockup torture, complaining of too little food, crowding and tension among prisoners.

Bob Dearing, an inspector who visited the Tarrant County Jail in July 1986 and again last July 15, said it was clear that conditions had worsened in the past year.

"The crowding has gotten worse," Dearing said. "It does make things deteriorate the more crowded it gets."

Sharks seen near coast of Texas where 3 women were attacked

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Sharks were seen offshore on Saturday, officials said, off Mustang Island, where three women were attacked by sharks earlier in the year.

There were no reported sightings of sharks Sunday, but schools of porpoises were spotted, a Coast Guard spokesman said.

On Saturday, authorities had warned beachgoers that several sharks, some up to 10 feet, had been seen in the area.

Area beachgoers remained cautious as they stayed in shallow water Sunday.

The reports of sharks and large schools of fish were near the shore between Bob Hall Pier and the Port Aransas jetties.

Jesse Arriaga, a Nueces County park deputy, said there were fewer people on the beach compared to last year.

He said most beachgoers seemed to be staying close to the shallow water, perhaps because they had heard about previous shark attacks.

"People see a fin and they start yelling; they've just seen too many 'Jaws' movies," he said.

Two women swimming half a mile apart near Port Aransas were attacked by sharks in mid-July.

Both women sustained bite wounds that required hospitalization.

A 16-year-old girl lost her right arm in a shark attack north of Mustang Island State Park last April.

Sellers making new fake IDs despite law

HOUSTON (AP) — Fake official-looking identification cards are still being sold despite new law meant to stop their production, a prosecutor said.

The sellers are using a hole in the statute — instead of the usual Texas ID cards, they use out-of-state labels and make and sell in Houston.

Most sellers of fake IDs complied with the new law some have simply switched cards from states like Arizona, Colorado, Florida and Louisiana, said assistant District Attorney Jeffrey D. Ross, who went to court for phony ID cards Saturday earlier last week.

"This kind of puts a hole in things," he said. "This will be a whole new problem."

The law, which went into effect Tuesday, requires any document that is similar to a driver's license or personal identification certificate issued by the state of Texas to be stamped with words "not a government document" in quarter-inch letters on the front and back.

But the law doesn't mention cards from other states.

"If these new cards start presenting a problem, we'll have to see about getting the law changed again," Ross said.

Ross said his office was cracking down on ID-card sellers in the county to make sure they are complying with the law.

The new law makes selling ID card too similar to a driver's license a Class C misdemeanor punishable by a $200 fine. A second offense ups the charge to a Class B misdemeanor.

Possessing such a card in violation of the law, earning a fine and a citation the first time, and a Class C misdemeanor charge on a second offense.
