As morning clouds gave way to bright sunshine, the temperature soared to 92 degrees with humidity approaching 60 percent, the National Weather Service said.
 Of the 500 treated by the Red Cross, 56 were evacuated to San Antonio hospitals by helicopter and ambulance, said Fernando Guerra, director of health for the metropolitan San Antonio area.
 During the ceremony, many of the readings and songs were in Spanish, and in the Mass, the pope switched to Spanish when he called upon the Hispanic community "to respond to its own needs, and to show generous and effective solidarity among its own members."
 He also lauded the "courage and generosity" of those who aid Latin American immigrants to the United States.
 "They have sought to show compassion in the face of complex human, social and political realities," he said. "Here human needs, both spiritual and material, continue to call out to the church with thousands of voices, and the whole church must respond" in concert with other Christian denominations.

 The pope did not mention sanctuary by name, but he appeared to refer to that movement which assists Latin Americans who enter the United States illegally. Two Roman Catholic priests and a nun were among eight sanctuary activists convicted in a six-month federal trial in Arizona last year.
 In Texas, the diocese of Brownsville operates Casa Oscar Romero, a shelter for illegal aliens named after the murdered archbishop of San Salvador, El Salvador. Two former directors and a former volunteer have been convicted on charges related to transporting illegal aliens.
 Later, the pope had the opportunity to see a longhorn steer penned near where he had lunch, and Texas bishops gave him a $1,000 Stetson cowboy hat and a painting of the mission of San Jose, Texas' first.
 "Ah, he just loved it," the Rev. Thomas J. Drury, bishop emeritus of Corpus Christi, said of the Stetson. The pontiff declined the hat, however.

 San Antonio Archbishop Flores had downscaled their estimated final crowd from 500,000 to 100,000 as visitors from the border where there were slow to arrive.
 Many Mexicans planning the trip were forced to cancel when they discovered they have to pay high insurance premiums to secure their buses. A new law requiring a $100,000 liability policy for Texas was blamed for the most of the expected 150,000 border officials had anticipated.
 Border Patrol officials said only about 3,500 had entered the country by Sunday. Hotels reported dozens of cancellations, which attributed to reports about large crowds and bad weather.
 For the pushers of Pope's papal pot holders and other merrymakers, Sunday was turning out to be more of a day of rest than the one as most reported that the slow.

Stretchers and golf carts are constantly going by, carrying victims of the heat. Marta Zepeda, a papal mass volunteer at the Medical Center Hospital in San Antonio, said people were brought in for heat, heatstroke, heart attacks and broken bones. Also, several women were brought in for possible miscarriages.
 Others are trying to keep cool with refreshments. The food vendors are doing a brisk business. Pepsi in a can is $1. Hotdogs are $2, and sausage in a bun is $3.
 The pope begins his homily, or sermon. He speaks on the necessity of unity within the Catholic Church. He also tells the people of the importance of the sacrament of penance, or confession, by using the story of the prodigal son. He criticizes the institutions that condone pre-marital sex. His voice booms from the speakers as he speaks on the wonderful mix of nationalities in our nation.
 Especially people from his native Poland.
 The heat has gotten to the crowd. They already are starting to leave. But they cannot really leave. The Secret Service has blocked one of the main routes out of the area until the pope's motorcade has left.

 Many of them hike through the woods on makeshift paths. Some climb through a barbed wire fence to try to get to their cars and shuttle buses.
 Bread is broken. Wine and water are mixed and consecrated. The Mass ends.
 The pope says his goodbyes.
 People are waiting to get a shoulder of the road to see the pope pass by in a black limousine crowd finally leaves.
 A small child named Senez pulls a red wagon behind his mother. The wagon has a bag with potato chips and other snacks inside.

of having to park and walk to the site, it is easier to just stay home."
 The theme of the papal visit in San Antonio was Catholic charities and social reform. The pope spoke at a special meeting to discuss Church involvement in these matters.
 But none of the papal hoopla had an effect on Willie Tarver, a former serviceman whose home is the San

TRANS RESIGN HUSBAND
 WASHINGTON (UPI) — Dole announced she is resigning as ambassador to the United Kingdom and plans to "do something" to help her husband, George Bush, win the presidential election. After meeting with reporters for nearly 15 minutes, she said she expected to be in London for her state swing through the next few days.
 "I want to be helpful," she said.
 Some Dole supporters are pushing for her to be an energetic campaigner, more active than her husband's. "Do it," speakers in the crowd said. "Do it, and in recent years, much of her time is expected to be spent in London."
 At times, Mrs. Dole has been considered a possible vice-presidential pick during the campaign. In Wisconsin, George Bush said he would like to see her. "Listen, I know you're a good wife," Bush asked. "You're a good wife, she's tough. I don't know what secret weapon my wife Reagan called
