German reports: Hackers tap into NASA's computers

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — Hackers broke into NASA's worldwide computer network throughout the summer and gathered secret data on space shuttle projects and rocket failures, West German media said Tuesday.

News reports said young West Germans gained regular access to at least 20 computers of the U.S. space agency and had the ability to paralyze the entire network.

The ARD television network said a flaw in the network's security system allowed the hackers to enter the network from May to September.

The NASA system connects more than 1,600 computers worldwide that share information on space research, nuclear physics and molecular biology, ARD said. The network includes U.S. atomic research facilities in Los Alamos, N.M.

The Hamburg-based magazine Stern reported similar information. "When I saw 'Welcome to the NASA headquarters... installation' on my screen, I was a little shocked, to say the least," the magazine quoted one youth as saying.

The Hamburg-based "Chaos Computer Club" said in a statement to news media Tuesday that the youths turned to the club for help when they realized the enormity of their discovery.

The statement said the hackers penetrated the network to show the "unbelievable weaknesses" of the security system and had no interest in the secret data.

The reports did not say how many hackers were involved or where they lived.

In Washington, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said it was preparing a statement.

Stern said the hackers, a term used for amateurs who gain access to private computer systems, obtained NASA memos to employees on daily space shuttle program updates and on how to deal with the media.

The magazine, quoting one youth's records of computer transactions, said the hackers were able to read users' electronic mail and had the ability to paralyze the entire network.

In one of the most serious security breaches, the hackers obtained NASA information on space projects, computer security and rocket boosters, the network said.

Scientists in at least six countries besides the United States are linked to the computer network, Stern said. The system is called "Space Physics Analysis" or SPAN.

In addition to the NASA computers at some of Europe's sophisticated research centers, including the European Agency in Darmstadt, West Germany, the European Nuclear Research Center in Geneva, A&M's Reber European Laboratory for Biology in Heidelberg, Germany, ARD said the hackers obtained more than 200 pages of information pertaining to entry into the computers for Tuesday night.

The computer club said it was discovered that all organizations in the network were notified.

U.N. chief announces cease-fire resolution in Iran-Iraq conflict

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The United Nations' chief ended his Persian Gulf peace mission Tuesday, saying he discussed "the outline of a plan" to implement a Security Council resolution calling for a cease-fire in the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war.

But Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar gave no indication before he flew out of Baghdad for New York of how successful his quest had been.

Perez de Cuellar spent two days talking with top Iranian government leaders in Tehran, then flew to the Iraqi capital Sunday night for talks with President Saddam Hussein, Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz and other senior Iraqis.

Aziz declared after Perez de Cuellar left that Iran "has rejected the resolution and is playing the game of gaining time."

He insisted that the council's July 20 resolution must be implemented "in letter and spirit," with an arms embargo and other sanctions imposed on Iran for failing to abide by the resolution's provisions.

Tehran radio, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, quoted Prime Minister Hussein Musavi as declaring: "The days when arms embargos and economic sanctions had any effect on our resolve or war effort are over."

A tacit truce in the tanker war in the gulf held for a sixth day.

A U.N. source who traveled with Perez de Cuellar spoke to reporters Monday night on condition he was not named. The source said he noted a "sense of moderation" on the Iranian side. But Iraqi officials and media dismissed the reported flexibility.

Iraq says it will comply with the resolution if Iran does. Tehran has not given a definitive response.

State Department orders closing of PLO department in Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department announced Tuesday it had ordered the Palestine Liberation Organization to close its Washington office within 30 days.

"This action is being taken to demonstrate U.S. concern over terrorism committed and supported by organizations and individuals affiliated with the PLO," spokesman Charles E. Redman said.

He said the PLO could maintain its New York office, which has "observer status" at the United Nations and that no harm would come from allowing this branch of the PLO to remain untouched.

Redman said the Washington office had operated as a foreign mission and therefore could be closed despite the First Amendment's free-speech and free-association guarantees.

However, the State Department official said the United States "fully supports the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people and respects their efforts to achieve these rights through a process of peaceful negotiations."

To back up the U.S. terrorism charges, Redman said, the PLO executive council member, who is accused in the 1985 hijacking of the cruise ship Achille Lauro and the slaying of an American passenger and the reaffiliation of militant Palestinian groups with the PLO.

Abraham H. Foxman, national director of the Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, called the action a significant step forward in the ongoing struggle against terrorism.

Morton H. Halperin, spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, said his group also believed the action was unconstitutional and planned to fight it.

"We think that the office has a right under the First Amendment to function and the government has a right to close it," he said.

DO YOU KNOW THE SCORE?

There are a lot of computer dealers all saying that they have the best deal. So how can that be? We at Computers, Etc. have designed a little score card to help you make an informed decision based on data analysis rather than emotional impulse.

Along that line, we might say a few words about ourselves. We don't believe in glass and chrome shelves, neon lights, or extensive display salons. More to the point, we don't believe our customers should pay a higher price for a computer in order to finance a lot of glitz when the only purpose of it is to trigger that emotional impulse to separate a customer from his money. In a way, it almost seems like tricking you into shopping yourself.

We would rather you put your money into a computer that works like a Ferrari and costs like a roller skate, instead of the other way around.

The MB models in the table are our hot new series of Hi-Tech LoCost machines just introduced, while those with an asterisk are historically our most popular configurations. But any configuration is available at the lowest possible cost.

For example, we could catch your attention with an even much lower price by selling a computer with only one disk drive, but we would be doing you a disservice which would be apparent the first time you needed to copy a bunch of files from one disk to another. You'd have to change diskettes at least twice for each file, maybe more than twice, depending on file length. So if you do want only one drive, please look out for developing a case of diskette elbow.

Or, maybe we should quote a vastly lower price by not including a monitor, as if you don't care that you can't see what you're doing.

Or, maybe we could cut back on the memory with only 256KB RAM instead of 640KB or 1MB (1024KB), if you write programs with only about five or six instructions.

Or, we could go with an underrated power supply instead of our fully adequate 180 Watt units, if you enjoy the aroma of electrical devices sizzling.

Maybe we could just let you think you're getting more than you really are, by the all too common practice of representing our 8-bit processors as being 16-bits.

Auto union to extend contracts

DEARBORN, Mich. — The United Auto Workers and Ford Motor Co. are bargaining Tuesday to extend a contract with the nation's largest automaker for an act unprecedented in the company's history.

Leaders of the 53 Ford locals across the country to take their 104,000 out on strike at midnight, received word less than an hour before the deadline that two sides were close to agreement and had decided to talk. The day-by-day action could be renewed for...

"We wouldn't be taking course of action if we didn't believe it was still possible to reach agreement within a reasonable period of time," UAW President Owen Bieber said.
