Frosh QB adds interesting twist to Aggies' game plan

By Anthony Wilson
 Sports Writer

Just when we thought the Great Aggie Quarterback Controversy was solved and strong-armed wonderboy Lance Pavlas was firmly entrenched in the position, in trots freshman Bucky Richardson — in the fourth quarter of the Southern Mississippi game with 12:51 on the clock.

At about that time 40,000 A&M fans who were tuned into the game on the radio turned to the person sitting next to them and said, "Who's he?"

Four and a half minutes later, as Richardson broke into the open field and sprinted toward the goal line, 40,000 A&M fans screamed "Go, Bucky, go!", turned to the person sitting next to them, gave them a hearty high five and wondered where and why the A&M coaching staff has been hiding this guy.

Richardson had been warned earlier in the week by offensive coordinator and quarterback coach Lynn Amedee to be ready to play against Southern Miss. But when his name was actually called, Richardson admits his heart relocated in his throat.

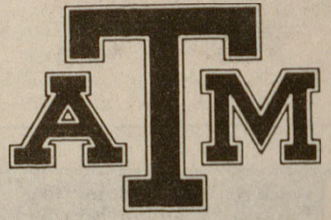

"I was nervous — my first time to go in, in a college game," he said. "I'd dreamed about that chance for so long. It was a real nervous feeling. I'm glad that that first time's over with because that can be a nightmare."

For Richardson, that first time was anything but a nightmare. In fact, it was more like a dream.

On his second series, facing third and 13, Richardson dropped back to pass. After scanning the field and finding no one open, Richardson tucked the ball under his arm and took off through a gaping hole in the middle. He ran through a few arm tackles, hurdled the last defensive back who had a shot at him, and used his 4.6 speed to outrun the rest of the field.

"I was just wanting to get to the goal line so I just told myself, 'Keep running,'" Richardson said.

"I didn't look back," he continued. "And there's always that chance that somebody might be on your tail that you don't know about, so you tend to go faster until you get to the end zone."

"All that apprehension of wanting to get that first snap, it can go against somebody just as easy as it can go for somebody," Richardson said about playing in his first game.

Amedee said the coaching staff decided to use Richardson in hopes of putting some life in the Aggies' stagnant offense.

"We felt like we needed a guy in there who could run the option game and try to give us a spark in our offense," the offensive coordinator said. "It was just a matter of down the road, getting into the conference, could we afford to redshirt him. And feeling that he might be too good to redshirt, we decided to take the shirt off of him and let him play."

The touchdown was Richardson's longest ever. In high school, he rushed for 1,217 yards and a 6.8 yard-per-carry average in a veer offense his senior year. Although he said his high school team lacked the proper size and speed to support a potent aerial attack, he did pass for 699 yards on 42 completions with six touchdowns.

Against Southern Mississippi, Richardson rushed five times for 102 yards and one touchdown, all in the fourth quarter. Fellow true freshman Darren Lewis rushed for 103 yards, marking the first time in A&M history that two freshmen rushed for 100 yards in the same game.

Amedee, who was mildly surprised by Richardson's play in the game, said Richardson will be looked to primarily to shift the running game into a higher gear.

"He's going to give us a guy who will give us a threat as a running back where a quarterback's concern-ned," Amedee said. "He will be an option guy. He will be a guy who will run the sprint game. He will do some things our other two quarterbacks won't do."

Although he played well and impressed his coaches, Richardson still not sure where he stands in the quarterback situation.

"I don't know what they're thinking as far as who's in front of who," he said. "But that's not really important to me. They give me a role and I'll be happy with it and do whatever they want. But I would do it and I'll be happy with it and then again, it goes back to just accepting my role and whatever they call, that's what I'm going to run."

Head Coach Jackie Sherrill announced at his press conference Tuesday that Richardson would play against Texas Tech on Saturday. But nobody has positively told him that he will play or what his role will be.

"They're not telling me anything," Richardson said. "They're just telling me to be ready. I'm kind of like a change-of-pace type guy. If something's happening, they're going to use me in and see if we can do something."

Amedee said Richardson definitely will see some action against Tech. Pavlas will start the game against Texas Tech on Saturday. Amedee said Richardson's rushing attack and senior Craig Starnes' supplying a steady effect between the two, he said.

The 6-foot-1, 195 pounder from Baton Rouge, La. was a Louisiana all-state selection, one of the state's top 16 recruits and the second-year quarterback in the state in 1986. He narrowed his college choices to Louisiana Tech, Baylor, LSU and A&M, then to LSU and A&M before choosing A&M.

Although A&M already had an entered and highly touted freshman quarterback in Lance Pavlas, Richardson's presence adds another dimension to the offense.

1975: Bean's 94-yard TD trot gave A&M a tough victory over Tech

By Tim Stanfield
 Sports Writer

Tim Stanfield is a sports writer for the Huntsville Item and statistician for the A&M Radio Network.

The situation looked grim for Texas A&M on October 11, 1975, when the Aggie offense took the field early in the third period, leading Texas Tech 10-9 in its Southwest Conference opener in Lubbock.

Two plays netted five yards, and as senior running back Bubba Bean broke out of the offensive huddle, he had no way of knowing that he was about to make A&M football history.

"We were backed up near our own end zone, and the play called for me to get a pitchout off the option to the right side of our offensive set," Bean said Thursday in his office in Rudder Tower. "We ran that play a lot, which called for the backs to arc outside and get a block at the corner."

"I looked upfield just as I got the pitch from quarterback David Shipman and saw that the lineman responsible for blocking downfield, Glenn Bujnoch, was already coming across the field with a couple of Tech guys with him."

Bean said that as he headed up the field along the A&M sideline, he noticed that several players, trainers, and coaches were waving their hands, signaling that he had a standup touchdown.
