BBB in Dallas limits advertising numbers for sexy phone calls

DALLAS (AP) — New standards by the Better Business Bureau could curb the hundreds of cards being placed in residents' mailboxes, inviting them to call "Linda" or "Monique" for sexy phone messages. It has been nearly three months since National Marketing, a telecommunications company based in Baltimore, started flooding mailboxes with its advertising cards. Although the post office has received more than 600 complaints and Southwestern Bell just as many calls, the envelopes have continued coming in. The Better Business Bureau in Dallas decided to step in and force television and direct-mail advertisers to include clear disclosures about charges and to shield children and teen-agers from a telephone number with the 976 prefix that provides the sexually-oriented messages.

ffering the service and amount charged.

Ads directed to minors should state that parental consent should be obtained.

In addition, if calls are suitable for adults only, direct-mail companies should print on the cards that the

"... we want to make sure it is clear to the customer what it is they are getting and how much it is going to cost them. We just don't want people to be misled."

— Bill Brekhart, vice president of trade practices for the Dallas BBB number should be restricted to persons 18 years or older.

The bureau also suggests that advertisers ask 976 companies to submit their address, another number that consumers can call for more information, length of the call, copy of the script and the company's refund policy.

Glenn Brook, assistant general manager of National Marketing, said they would adhere to all the new guidelines.

"Anything they request us to do, we'll do it," he said. "They want the type bigger? We'll make it bigger. They want phone numbers? We'll give them phone numbers."

"In our approach so far, we've done everything by the book, so this is no exception."

Foes of Texas nuclear dump want DOE to deal openly AMARILLO (AP) — State officials and opponents of a proposed Panhandle site for a nuclear-waste depository say they are frustrated in their dealings with the U.S. Department of Energy.

The latest example is the DOE's reply to one of many complaints on nuclear dump-site work in Deaf Smith County, said Susan Zimmerman, geologist with Gov. Bill Clements' Nuclear Waste Programs Office in Austin.

DOE officials said they were not concerned that contractors preparing characterization studies could distort the Panhandle site's merits to get contracts for work on the multi-million-dollar repository project.

Zimmerman told the Amarillo Globe-News this is typical of the DOE.

"Anytime we bring up a concern, 90 percent of the time they don't think it's a concern," she said. "They feel they know everything."

Along with locations in Nevada and Washington state, DOE chose a nine-square-mile site in Deaf Smith County 35 miles west of Amarillo County in 1986 as a finalist for the nation's first high-level radioactive-waste dump.

Characterization studies of the Panhandle site began earlier this year and are expected to last until the mid-1990s. A final site is expected to be selected soon thereafter and opened in 2003.

The concern over contractor conflict of interest is the latest in a long line of opponents' concerns, including:

• Landowners of the proposed dump site near Vega for months asked for details on DOE's plan to buy or lease their land. DOE officials did not provide the information because it would "usurp our plans to be flexible," Jeff Neff, DOE project manager in the Panhandle, said.

• The DOE scheduled informational meetings with the landowners to fulfill congressionally required consultation and cooperation sessions. In February, 20 landowners and their families walked out of one such DOE meeting because they said they had no information with which to ask intelligent questions.

Two weeks ago DOE released a draft land-acquisition plan that opponents say is flawed and was issued to garner public support as criticism of the nuclear waste program mounts in Congress. DOE officials countered they were merely following procedure.

• DOE officials have touted the economic benefits of site characterization work in Deaf Smith County, but they admit most of the workers will live in Amarillo. Also, a significant portion of the workforce will be transferred in or hired from other parts of the country.
