Texas City crewmen continue to drain tank containing toxic acid

TEXAS CITY (AP) — Refinery workers continued draining toxic acid from a ruptured storage tank Sunday, while a neighborhood evacuation remained in effect, officials said.
 About 3,000 people left their homes Friday evening after a cloud of hydrofluoric acid was released from a storage tank ruptured in a crane accident at the Marathon Petroleum Co. plant.

Police Capt. Jerry Doraty said late Saturday that many had returned to their homes, and the area of forced evacuation had been reduced to about 20 blocks around the affected area.
 Texas City police officer Ed Turner said, "Everything is still blocked up, people are still evacuated."

Spokesman Beverly Boase said during the weekend, about 370 people sought treatment for breathing difficulties and skin and eye irritation at AMI-Danforth Hospital.

Most were considered minor injuries.

Of the 109 admitted for treatment, only 34 remained Sunday morning, Boase said. All 34 were in stable condition, and many were expected to be discharged Sunday.

When the tank was ruptured Friday evening, the hydrofluoric acid inside vaporized, spreading a toxic cloud.

Marathon Petroleum Co. spokesman Bill Ryder said emergency crews shot down some of the mist with water and worked through the weekend to drain the remaining chemicals from the tank. The operations were still going on Sunday, Ryder said.

"We continued pumping through the evening and right now we have shut down because we did lose some pressure as anticipated," Ryder said Sunday morning.

Hydrofluoric acid, strong enough to etch glass, is used in the refinery as a catalyst to speed up separation of hydrocarbons into lighter products, such as benzene.
