Official calls for Hispanics to fight policy

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — State Rep. Eddie Cavazos says Hispanics should work together to fight further U.S. aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

"I am really concerned that our federal government on the one hand wants to give the Contras millions of dollars, and on the other hand, they want to cut social programs," the Corpus Christi Democrat said.

"If you believe that our job is not to throw more arms into this program, then it is your job to throw your support behind the peace plan and convince our congressmen not to send funds there," he said.

Cavazos spoke at a "Just Say No to Contra Aid" rally in Corpus Christi designed to show support of the Arias peace plan. It was sponsored by the Central American Information Center, Pax Christi of South Texas, Nueces County Democratic Club and Causa de Paz.

The Central American peace plan, drafted by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, calls for cease-fires, amnesties and democratic reforms in Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala.

"The last thing we need is a communist neighbor to the South," Cavazos said. "We have neglected our neighbors to the South and abused them long enough. It is time that we, as Hispanic Americans, support our brothers and sisters and if they want democracy, help them to attain that."

William Velasquez, executive director of the Southwest Voter Registration Education Project, said polls have shown the majority of Americans opposing continued aid to the Nicaraguan rebels.

"The important point is that by two-to-one, Hispanics are against the U.S. policy in Central America," Velasquez said.

Job gives climatologist opportunity to answer questions

John F. Griffiths, professor of meteorology and state climatologist

By Tony Poncio
Reporter

When lawyers need information on the weather conditions involved in one of their cases, they often call State Climatologist John F. Griffiths.

Griffiths, a professor of meteorology, has taught at A&M since 1962 and has served as Texas state climatologist since his appointment in 1973 by former Texas Gov. Dolph Briscoe Jr.

As state climatologist, Griffiths keeps a repository of data so he can answer questions.

Griffiths says his job duties include providing assistance to state agencies and the people of Texas when they have a climatological questions.

He also provides information for lawyers.

"Weather is very much in the forefront of litigation in some accident cases," Griffiths says.

He says that many of the claims are weather-related and lawyers need information concerning the day in question.

They want to know if roads were really wet or if it was possible for the sun to temporarily have blinded the drivers.

Griffiths, aided by graduate assistants Janine Bryan and Mary Avery, also helps researchers in many fields and most agricultural interests.

The state climatologist's office does not give out forecasts in response to inquiries, but is more concerned with the weather's total picture.

Griffiths says the office is concerned with averages, extremes and overall patterns of climate.

As state climatologist, Griffiths is responsible for several publications including series publications and single-sheet information.

Recent publications from his office include "The Climates of Texas Counties" and "100 Years of Texas Weather."

Financial support for the office comes from A&M, not as specifically allocated funds from the state, Griffiths says.

"I get paid for my position as professor for the meteorology department," he says.

He performs his duties as state climatologist in addition to his teaching responsibilities.

Griffiths says the office does suffer from the lack of direct state funding or its location on the A&M campus.

"It doesn't really matter who you are since most of the work is done by phone," he says.

Griffiths teaches both undergraduate and graduate courses in agricultural climatology and architectural meteorology.

Griffiths adds administrative and research duties to his teaching and state responsibilities.

He says the state work becomes priority only when the weather is atypical because that is when more information is requested.
