In Advance

Danish traveler to show picture essay

"American Pictures," a multimedia show of a Danish vagabond's journey through America's underclass, will be shown tonight in Rudder Theater at 6:30.

The show is a controversial picture essay created by Jacob Holdt, a young Danish citizen who captured the richest and poorest parts of America on film over a five-year period.

Holdt redesigned his photos for large screens, put them to narration and music and formed a non-profit, traveling organization under the same name as the program.

American Pictures' visit to Texas A&M is sponsored by MSC Great Issues. Holdt presents his show in person and usually mingles with the audience during intermission. He encourages open discussions about issues such as racism and poverty, which are visualized in the first part of his presentation.

As a foreigner, Holdt analyzes both black and white relationships in the '80s. Holdt designed the program to give his audiences an objective, yet oppressive look at what some may call "the other side of America." He claims to have traveled over 100,000 miles to get these pictures.

While traveling, he lived in more than 400 homes - from those of the poorest Southern sharecroppers to those of America's wealthiest families.

This year the program will be presented at schools around the country, including Harvard, Brown and Berkeley.

The film portion of the presentation was selected as outstanding film of the year by the London Film Festival.

Admission to "American Pictures" is $1.

Great Issues will provide a follow-up discussion Tuesday at 8 a.m. in 026 MSC.

Newspaper says law caused crash of savings industry

DALLAS (AP) — After legislation deregulated thrifts, the industry went on a three-year tear that could take as much as $60 billion and a decade to clean up, the Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

Since 1984, 134 savings associations have been closed and liquidated or placed in conservatorship programs. Another 74 have merged into healthier financial institutions. Currently 387 more are carried as operating but insolvent, the News reported in a copyright story.

The federally-insured thrifts bankrupted the nation's deposit insurance funds, the newspaper said. From 1983 to 1986, an estimated $28 billion disappeared from the nation's thrift season. More than 10 percent of that total is believed attributable to corruption and fraud.

In Texas, 46 percent of the state's 281 thrifts are technically insolvent. Its thrifts hold more than 40 percent of the nation's $17.08 billion repossessed thrift assets.

Federal regulators say cleaning up the five-year savings and loan mess could take as much as $60 billion and a decade to achieve.

"We gave thrifts all the tools of deregulation, but we forgot about the (federal deposit) insurance," said Thomas P. Vartanian, a former Federal Home Loan Board counsel who helped write much of the deregulation legislation. "We deregulated, but we didn't deregulate enough."

Through a combination of relaxed standards, bad legislation and disastrous competition between state and federal regulators, risk-taking entrepreneurs were able to siphon billions of no-risk dollars from the savings industry before government perceived the problem.

Plane crash

Altizer and Largent said they were about 2,500 feet down the runway from the plane when the crash occurred.

"They made a go-around about 50 feet above the runway, then banked right," Altizer said. "They passed right over us. When they got past the other end of the runway, they made a right base, which is the last step before final approach for landing."

"He just kept turning steeper and steeper. That's when he hit the power line."

Largent, who has a private pilot's license, said it looked like Clark turned too soon.

"He never got 100 yards past the runway," Largent said. "He was cutting it too close. He never got directly facing the runway."

The two men started running toward the plane when they heard the impact. Both said they saw the two portions of the split power line "shorting each other out." After Largent called 911, they drove to the crash.

"Right as we got there, Travis was getting out of the plane," Altizer said. "Then a passer-by helped Mark out. There were a lot of people already there; it was very overcrowded."

Largent said he then called the Montgomery County Flight Service

Station so a "notice to airmen" could be sent to warn other pilots. The airport didn't close.

The two employees weren't required to stay at the airport while the Cessna was in the air, Largent said.

"We were on our way out the door when Mark mentioned they were going to take the plane up," Largent said. "We weren't hanging out just because he was in the air. We were looking at some stuff down the runway. No one would have been there if we hadn't just decided to hang around."

Altizer said Clark did not tell them he intended to fly the plane when he first arrived at the airport.

"He and Travis just came in and started talking to us," he said. "He didn't mention flying at first. We were all walking out the door (of the terminal) as a group - Chris and I were talking about the 140. Then they said they were taking it up."

Taylor said Clark was "the least likely to get himself in this sort of predicament."

"He is a really nice young man," he said. "This is so totally out of character."

Taylor said his airplane was in mint condition before the crash.

"It was the most beautiful little plane," he said. "It had been babied and cared for by every owner it's ever had. Even the owners' manual didn't have one torn page."

Collision

New Braunsfels, and his wife, Valaree Marbach, were not injured and were released at the scene, he said.

Eldredge was the investigating officer at the scene and provided a press release with details of the accident.

At around 5:40 p.m. Hicks was driving his pickup truck southbound and lost control of the truck because of rainy weather conditions and swerved into the northbound lane, Eldredge said.

Thornton's car, a 1982 Honda, collided with the truck and Thornton was killed instantly in the crash, Eldredge said.

As the cars separated from the impact, Marbach, also driving in the northbound lane, attempted to maneuver the 1984 Mobile Travel motor home through the open space between the separated vehicles, Eldredge said.

Marbach was unable to avoid the collision with Thornton's Honda, Eldredge said.
