sertion. "I'm uncertain what a marriage certificate does to insure safe sex," he said.

"AIDS education is about saving lives," he said, "which is of greater importance than your moral point of view." Without that education, sexually active teenagers are put at risk, he said.

Levi encouraged the use of condoms as an important part of, but not complete, protection against infection with the AIDS virus.

"We want to teach everybody to take responsibility for their own lives and to protect themselves," he said.

But Schlafly said it is "unhealthy" to teach children that sex with condoms is all right, because it promotes teenage sexual activity and pregnancy.

"When people come into the public schools and tell them that sex can be safe with condoms when teenagers engage in sex with each other, they are telling something that just isn't true," she said.

Shelp, however, refuted the idea that sex education leads to and encourages promiscuity.

"There's a motion in some circles that teaching sex is promoting sex," he said. "But it's teaching how to protect their (students') health. We make a point of telling them the risks, not to promote sex, but to inform them of the facts."

Yet according to constitutional information, Schlafly said, giving that information in public schools is morally wrong.

"It's simply unacceptable," she said. "You can't legitimize promiscuity."

ity. It's a violation of the First Amendment constitutional right for those of us who believe that premarital sex is wrong. Our children have the right to be in a public school classroom and be free from having some authority figure tell them that premarital sex is OK."

Among other topics discussed, Shelp said that AIDS presents a moral challenge.

"AIDS, misinformation about the AIDS virus and fear and prejudice toward people with AIDS are being manipulated to advance the agenda of the political and religious right," he said.

"The challenge to us all implicit in this observation is whether we will be misled by the exploitations of the ideological right or whether we will meet the challenge of AIDS by doing what is morally right," he said.

Terrorism

gime that oppresses the opposition by force.

For example, most of Gadhafi's involvement in terrorism is in Libya and also abroad against his opposition. They use terrorism also against their neighbors. For example, Syria used to support terrorist groups in Jordan. To keep Jordan, for example, from changing its attitude toward Israel...

They kiss one day and the next you embrace someone with your left hand and with your right you're stabbing them with a knife. That's part of this society...

They found out they can gain political achievements by spreading terrorism to other countries in the Western world.

They have done it for several reasons, mainly for their own interests and to achieve political goals. For example, Libya has supported in the past and still supports terrorist groups in France and Italy, though both France and Italy are not big supporters of Israel. So why did Gadhafi do it? Because France supports forces in Chad, which is south of Libya, in order to deter Gadhafi from taking over that state, which he has tried in the past.

So in retaliation he put pressure on France by supporting terrorists. The same with Italy. Italy is a staunch appeaser of the Palestine Liberation Organization. But still Gadhafi supports terrorist groups in Italy like the famous Red Brigade, because Italy opposes his ambition in Northern Africa, in Tunisia and in Chad.

By using terrorism all over the world they found it is a beneficial way to achieve what they want — until recently when the U.S. decided to in your assumption that... destabilization in the Middle East is good for the Soviets. As long as there is conflict in the Middle East there is a good opportunity for the Soviet Union. Basically all the Soviet Union has offer in the world is military aid. They have little to offer in economic or social aid.

The Middle East, by the way, change its attitude toward terrorism and rather than appeasing these countries it is willing to use force against them...

Q: Are Israel and some of the other countries in the area worried that with Iran's strategic position with a border with the Soviet Union, it could become so destabilized that it could be an avenue for the Soviet Union to move into the Middle East?

A: Israel, in a way, is a very unique country in the Middle East. It's a democratic country and the most stable and the most Westernized society in the region. But you are right one of the most important areas from the Soviet perspective. First of all, it's very close to the Soviet border. Iran and Turkey have a border with the Soviets and the other part of the Middle East are not far from the Soviet Union.

So I would say that in general, political settlement with peace or a political settlement in the Middle East between Israel and its neighbors... is good for the Western world and it's beneficial for the United States, while destabilization and conflict in the Middle East is in favor of the Soviets.
