Lawmakers plan to push state lottery

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers who voted for pari-mutuel gambling also would vote for a state lottery, pro-lottery lawmakers said Thursday in announcing their latest plan for seeking approval for the state-run game of chance.

In its latest incarnation, the strategy includes a 1988 special session of the Legislature, which may or may not happen, and, perhaps, two statewide elections.

Despite the uncertainties involved, Rep. Ron Wilson and Sen. Hector Uribe expressed confidence about winning approval for lottery. The confidence is fueled by the Nov. 3 voter approval for pari-mutuel gambling on horse and dog racing.

"I think if lottery had been on the ballot at that time it would have received overwhelming support from the citizens of the state of Texas," Wilson said at a Thursday news conference. "We think that it's time we get lottery on the ballot."

Wilson plans to get it on the ballot, possibly as soon as next November, by urging Gov. Bill Clements to put lottery on the agenda of any special session called next year. The Legislature does not meet again in regular session until January 1989, but, as Wilson said, "We've always, usually, have some kind of special session in an off year for some reason or another, if nothing else but to regulate underwater basketweaving."

If a 1988 special session is called, and if Clements puts lottery on the agenda, Wilson would seek legislative approval for a statewide, non-binding referendum. It would take a majority vote in the House and Senate to do that.

Man to keep disposing of bodies

HOUSTON (AP) — An embattled Houston funeral director says he'll continue disposing of aborted fetuses and human bodies regardless of potential regulatory action against him.

Richard Herrin Jr. disclosed Nov. 5 he was unable to find a cemetery to bury about 200 fetuses he had contracted to dispose of Houston abortion clinics.

Since then, he has come under regulatory scrutiny, becoming the subject of an administrative charge of disposing of three adult bodies without proper licensing, authorities say.

The charge alleges Herrin arranged cremations for a fee for the three bodies without the required funeral establishment license, according to Larry Farrow, executive director of the Texas Funeral Service Commission.

Herrin could face suspension or revocation of his funeral director's license and fines of up to $45,000 if found guilty, Farrow said.

Herrin's case is to be heard by the nine-member commission Dec. 2, in Austin. Herrin said he did not plan to attend the hearing but would fight to keep his license.

"We're ready to go to court," said Herrin, who operates Continental Cremation Services from his southwest Houston apartment.

Herrin has promised to continue disposing of fetuses and adult bodies regardless of what happens with his funeral director's license and said several attorneys offered him free legal services after hearing of his predicament.

If Herrin's license is revoked and he continues to dispose of fetuses, state authorities could seek an injunction and try to have Herrin held in contempt of court if he ignores the order, Farrow said.
