Gospelfest draws 800 to hear choirs sing, praise God

By Barbette Foley
Reporter

About 800 people attended the Texas A&M Voices of Praise Sixth Annual Gospelfest, a gospel music extravaganza featuring choirs and representatives from around the state.

Guests choirs were from the Christian Hope Baptist Church in Houston, University of Texas at Arlington, Southern Methodist University, North Texas State University, Lamar University, Southwest Texas State University, the University of Texas and Prairie View A&M University.

Review

The theme for the program was "Renewed by His Strength," taken from Isaiah 40:31. Jacqueline Giles, a Voices of Praise adviser, was mistress of ceremonies.

"This is not a competition but a chance for everyone to proclaim the power of Christ," Giles said.

The Voices of Praise sang four selections, opening with "We've Come to Praise Him."

Christian Hope brought the crowd to its feet while singing two upbeat gospel songs. UTA sent a representative who sang an old spiritual and SMU rendered two selections.

SMU's director said, "We may be few in number, but we all have the love of God."

The Robert Sims Drama Theater from Houston presented a short gospel drama interpretation of "God's Amazing Grace," which brought an emotional response from the audience.

The second half of the program consisted of a UT organist's solo and selections by the Lamar choir, which arrived near the end of the program.

The crowd enjoyed the Prairie View selections tremendously, which included a non-traditional version of the Lord's Prayer.

SWTSU sent representatives but only participated in the mass choir.

After all the individual choirs performed, the TAMUS Mass Choir, consisting of the Voices of Praise and Prairie View choirs, rendered three selections — this was the first time in the six-year history of Gospelfest that the two choirs performed together.

The program culminated with the mass choir filling the stage to its capacity and singing four selections to the crowd's delight. The mass choir included all choirs and representatives who came to share Gospelfest with the Voices of Praise.

Lisa Washington, a member of the audience, called the program "a blessing."

"The Bible says God is going to pour out his spirit among all flesh," she said. "It's a blessing to see young people serving God and taking time out from this old, wicked world to give all the honor to whom it is due. For that we say thank you."

Gospelfest was an all-day event that included four seminars about Christian life given by guest speakers from Fort Worth and Houston.

Later, the mass choir rehearsed and a luncheon with a short program including four skits presented by Sims Drama Theater was held.

Richele Theodore, a chemistry graduate student who participated in Gospelfest for the first time, said "Gospelfest was great."

"It made me so happy to see how different college choirs could come together and worship God. In New Orleans we have musicals, but I have never seen one on such a grand scale. I was really glad to be a part of it."

National director of Libertarian party says drug laws should be abolished

Speech at A&M addresses party's view of government

By Deborah A. Haring
Reporter

Despite the popularity of the "Say No to Drugs" campaign, the Libertarian party would like to see America's drug laws abolished, Paul Jacob, the party's national director, told a small audience at Texas A&M last week.

The comment was made during a talk in Rudder Tower sponsored by A&M's Atheists, Agnostics and Free-Thinkers Society.

Libertarians believe people should and will take responsibility for their actions if only they were left alone. Because of this, they think gambling, prostitution and drug laws are bad laws, he said.

According to Jacob, legalizing drugs would take away organized crime's biggest economic weapon and also would take some of the excitement out of taking drugs.

If people were free to take drugs, problems that result from substance abuse would come out and could be dealt with openly.

"Right now they're spreading AIDS probably faster through intravenous drug use than through sex," Jacob said. "The reason is because syringes are illegal and so they have to use the same ones over and over. If we legalize syringes tomorrow we can wipe out part of the AIDS problem abuse — we would certainly put a dent in it."

But politicians don't talk about such issues, Jacob said, because they want to make statements that win votes, such as "I'm tough on drugs."

"Making things illegal just because you think they are wrong is not the solution to problems. In a society where people have different views and philosophies it's very important to give everyone the chance to live life according to their own beliefs."

— Paul Jacob, national director of Libertarian party

And politicians are more concerned with votes than they are with issues, he said.

Ron Paul, the Libertarian candidate for the 1988 presidential election, shares these views, Jacob said. Paul, a former four-term Republican congressman from Houston, supported Reagan in his two elections but has become disillusioned with him, Jacob said.

"Ronald Reagan said that he would cut the size of government, cut taxes, cut spending, cut regulation, get government off our backs and end draft registration," Jacob said. "He delivered on zero of these promises. He raised taxes, spent more money than any president in history and went back on his promise to end draft registration."

Libertarians want the draft to be abolished not because they are an anti-war party, but because the draft is one of the powers government shouldn't have, he said.

"We believe that the American people, if ever threatened, will volunteer in large numbers," Jacob late the lives of the country's citizens.

"Government exists for only one purpose — to protect the individual from force and from fraud. If people hurting him, robbing him, or trying to cheat him," he said. "There is no other role for government."

Libertarians would cut taxes or abolish them if possible because they believe taxes are inherently wrong.

"There's no difference between someone telling you that you owe them $25 that you don't owe and sending an IRS agent to collect it and someone catching you in a lie and saying, 'Give me all the money,'" Jacob said. "It's the same thing; it's basically theft."

Jacob criticized current foreign policy by saying that even with all the weapons the United States has, it's more secure now than it was 100 years ago.

"We cannot run around the world using the gunboat diplomacy worked 50 years ago," he said. "We capture the hearts and minds of the world we have to take out the world to them. We need to defend our country, not the rest of the world. We need to stop settling governments and allow the world to form their own governments."

People in America should have their freedoms denied, Jacob said.

"The solution to this is to let people be free," he said.
