MADD holds campaign for holidays

By Jena Atchison
 Reporter

The approaching holiday season brings thoughts of vacation and relaxation, and this may mean that some people will "tie one on", abusing alcohol or driving drunk.

To encourage people to drive carefully and avoid abusing alcohol during the holidays, The Brazos Valley chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving is conducting a "tie one on" campaign, said Anita Friedman, an administrative assistant for MADD.

"Tie one on" in the context of MADD's campaign does not mean another drink, but a reminder — in the form of a red ribbon — to use alcohol responsibly.

The local MADD chapter is joining the national MADD "red-ribbon campaign," Friedman said. The red ribbon — which will be tied on the hood ornament, antenna or mirror of vehicles — is designed to remind people to be careful when driving during the Christmas holiday. MADD is distributing red ribbons in the community.

"We hope people will tie a red ribbon on their car to show others they are hoping for a less violent future," Friedman said. "It's a subtle reminder to be careful and we hope people will stop and think when they see a ribbon."

Friedman said ribbons are available at the Bryan and College Station police departments, the Brazos County Courthouse, the Post Oak Mall Information Desk, Chimney Hill Florist and Bally's Aladdin's Castle in the Manor East Mall.

In keeping with this effort, the College Station City Council plans to sign a resolution Thursday that will designate next week as "Drunk and Drugged Driving Awareness Week."

To help promote the campaign, MADD had an entry in Sunday's Bryan-College Station parade.

"Both high schools are joining the campaign," Friedman said. "The Students Against Drunk Driving chapter is distributing ribbons to students and faculty."

"Many people are involved in this. We hope it will make a difference."

Along with the red-ribbon campaign, MADD also is involved in the annual candlelight vigil at the College Station Community Center, to be held Monday at 7:30 p.m.

"Every year, in a special way, we remember those killed in drunk-driving incidents," Friedman said. "This year the national vigil will be in San Antonio."

Friedman said the national chapter of MADD in Hurst sends out ideas for public-awareness campaigns. She said it is up to individual chapters of MADD to decide which campaign they want to sponsor.

But she said the candlelight vigil is a national event in which all chapters participate.

Anniversary reminds man of Pearl Harbor

DALLAS (AP) — Phillip L. Willis' memory hasn't dimmed since the morning of Dec. 7, 1941, 46 years ago today.

He was supposed to leave Hawaii the next day and get married three weeks later. But as Japanese machine-gun fire ripped through roof of his barracks, he knew plans had been changed and wedding would have to wait.

Willis, a 23-year-old lieutenant in the Army Air Corps stationed at low Field near Pearl Harbor, still dressed in a tuxedo he had worn the night before to a farewell celebration when gunfire tore through the roof of his barracks at 7:55 a.m.

"We looked out the window and saw these red balls on their wings we knew," Willis said.

In the ensuing confusion, as bunkmates cursed and sirens wailed, Willis couldn't find his shoes so he instead pulled on his cowboy boots.

Willis, a retired Dallas real estate broker, former state representative and blue-ribbon chili cook, then went to the skies to save his plane, equipped only for observation, from Japanese bombs.

During the war that began on December morning, he shot down eight enemy planes and sank two ships.

Willis, 69, and other members of the North Central Texas Chapter of the Pearl Harbor Survivors Association were to commemorate the Monday with a wreath-laying ceremony at Laurel Land Memorial Park.

Answers to overcrowding in prisons elude officials

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements and county judges from Dallas, Houston and Fort Worth met privately Monday, but failed to find an answer for county jails that are jammed with felons awaiting transfer to crowded state prisons.

"What we're trying to do is seek and find new solutions to an old problem," Clements said.

"We've exchanged a lot of ideas," he said. "Some are acceptable, some need further exploration."

Under a hurry-up building plan now in the early stages, the state will add about 11,000 beds within two years. County officials say that will help, but they said it's not soon enough.

"We may look at 20 different administrative improvements, each of which has the capacity for Dallas County to impact 20 to 100 jail beds," Dallas County Judge Lee Jackson said. "Those things add up over time, but they're not as dramatic as if there were an opportunity to build a 2,000-bed state prison tomorrow."

Clements said counties might have to look at increased use of work-release programs for non-violent prisoners.

"Those are low-risk prisoners we are talking about. The alternative to that is to release more of the higher-risk prisoners out of TDC (Texas Department of Corrections)," Clements said.
