8. Darryl McDonald
"D-Mack, the Playground King," as A&M Basketball Head Coach Shelby Metcalf quickly dubbed McDonald, bounced on the SWC scene with a no-look backdoor pass and a tomahawk slam-dunk. His incredible on-court feats earned him "Shot of the Week" honors from CNN two weeks in a row and kept Aggie fans on the edge of their seats all season long.

His teammates eventually began to expect impossible passes coming their way from McDonald instead of letting them bounce off their hands. The junior-college transfer emerged as a full-time starter and designated spark plug.

In the SWC tournament, McDonald and the Aggies easily beat three of the top four seeds — including conference champion Texas Christian in the opening round — to claim the SWC tournament crown and a berth in the NCAA tournament. McDonald was named to the conference All-Tournament team.

7. Winston Crite
Crite was the leader of the Aggie basketball team and emerged as one of the most dominating players in the conference. The senior was a consensus All-SWC choice and was named SWC Tournament Most Valuable Player.

Crite, lightly regarded by professional scouts because of his lack of height, was a low draft pick of the Phoenix Suns and made the roster.

6. Lance Pavlas
The highly touted quarterback from nearby Tomball finally got his chance to show his talents in college football. He was the major reason the Aggie coaching staff was not more upset over the defection of Kevin Murray, and many expected him to win the job from senior Craig Stump quickly.

He won the job all right, but he lost it quickly. His strong passing arm was offset by his weak reading of defenses. However, he remained an option in the A&M offensive attack for the rest of the season. That became obvious at the Cotton Bowl.

5. Bucky Richardson
The Aggie coaches were baffled on the Monday night before the A&M-Baylor game. The game was crucial for the survival of A&M's hopes for a third consecutive trip to the Cotton Bowl, and the A&M offense to that point had been, at best, erratic. A better word might be "pathetic."

The decision: restructure the offense. The solution: an option-oriented offense instead of a pro-set offense. The key: a freshman from Baton Rouge.

Richardson got the starting nod and led the team to a 31-10 win.

Starting off and on for the rest of the season, Richardson wowed fans with his running ability — starting on his second play from scrimmage against Southern Mississippi when he broke free for an 82-yard touchdown.

4. Darren Lewis
The freshman from Dallas Carter High School got headlines before he took a single handoff. Lewis scored a 470 on his SAT, causing a furor over recruitment of athletes who do not meet minimal scholastic requirements. Lewis later scored high enough for admission.

He made his presence felt immediately. Instead of being redshirted as he expected, Lewis played in the opener against Louisiana State and was used extensively throughout the season.

He rushed for 714 yards, averaged 5.3 yards per rush, and was named to many second-team All-SWC lineups. He was a consensus choice for SWC Newcomer of the Year.

3. The Class of '87 seniors
Roger Vick started an avalanche of Aggies in the 1987 NFL draft by being the 21st pick and the York Jets' first-round pick. Bernstine followed two picks later, going to the San Diego Chargers. Johnny Holland, Rod Smith, Larry Kelm, Bullett and Irwin followed. All made their mark and many of them started for or all of the 1987 NFL season.

2. Shawn Andaya
My choice for A&M athlete of the year. The ace pitcher led the softball team to a national championship. The co-captain named second-team All-American and led the team to a national championship in the softball of the College World Series. pitched every game in Omaha, threw a two-hitter in the championship game against Iowa.

1. Kevin Murray
Sheer volume of stories was the star quarterback. It started Cotton Bowl, where Murray five interceptions in a losing game against Ohio State. Murray announced he would return optional fourth year at A&M just as quickly said he had left his mind and would go pro.

Rumors floated all around state and nation that Murray asked to leave by Head Coach Athletic Director Jackie Sherrill divert attention from A&M University was (and is) being targeted for illegal activities, and Murray was the biggest target for arrows.

Then came the draft. A quarterback-poor field yielded Murray in the first round and several throughout the 12 rounds. Murray was none of them. A bad knee and a bad ankle were the reasons teams shied away, some said.

Murray soon announced he was "sitting out" the 1987 pro season. He has his ankle fully rehabilitated. The operation prevented him from latching onto any team during NFL players' strike.

Aggies

Why did they keep shooting from outside? Largely because the greatly undersized Aggies put a stranglehold on the Hogs.

Arkansas missed 11 shots inside the paint against the team with two starters over 6-4 (who are generously described as 6-7 and 6-8). The Hogs have four players taller than either of them.

But those two Aggies are the main reason A&M looks as good as it does. Donald Thompson and Doug Dennis have provided the inside play necessary to complement the backcourt acrobatics of Darryl McDonald.

Thompson, a junior-college transfer with two years of eligibility remaining, ranks sixth in the conference in rebounding with eight per game. That's almost one of every three Aggie boards. Plus he's averaging 14 points per game.

Dennis — a former Texas Longhorn who was so poor he had his scholarship withdrawn — transferred from North Arkansas Community College and has emerged as a defender and a fairly reliable scorer from inside the paint. He has 10 points against Arkansas before being shut out and was a major force in the shut-down of the Hog offense.

While waiting to talk to A&M Head Coach Nolan Richardson, the latest A&M upset, I happened to hear an obviously stunned Aggie comment on the situation. "Whooda thunkit?" he said. "much says it all, don't you think?"
