

FBI director: Judiciary should do more to balance rights of defendants, media

SAN ANTONIO (AP) —The judicial system should do more to protect defendants' rights while not infringing on journalists' First Amendment protection to cover news events, FBI Director William Sessions, says.

Sessions, a former federal judge in San Antonio, was one of several panelists attending a media-law seminar Saturday at the University of Texas at San Antonio.

Arthur Miller, a Harvard law professor, was the moderator for the panel that also included lawyers, law officers, journalists, judges and Mayor Henry Cisneros.

The panelists discussed how they would handle the fictional case involving the arrest of Dirk Dougan, a Nazi who was suspected in a string of murders.

Journalists said they would devote a great deal of time and resources to uncovering Dougan and the latest victim's past.

Others panelists discussed how they would handle the case in their respective jobs.

Sessions said officials should get a defendant in and out of public buildings through the back doors.

"In a sense you are dealing with that person's right carefully," Sessions said. "Even though the media is still out there, you haven't subjected him to those things that deprive him of those equal rights."

"In the management of the court, gentlemen, you need to say, 'We must be sure that we have a system to afford these people their right not to be made a spectacle of.'"

"The media has an absolute responsibility to pursue a story. The media can make a zoo out of it if it's allowed to happen."

Reuben Greenberg, police chief in Charleston, S.C., said he would always try to get a murder suspect away from journalists so that a picture of the defendant would not prejudice potential witnesses.

"You don't want his picture in the paper or on television," Greenberg said. "It would taint the case. You would be doing the defense's work for them."

He also defended journalists' rights to cover a story.

"I think we accept them being there," Greenberg said. "We accept it as a part of the ritual."

Cisneros said that he would like to see a balanced story of the victim, but would prefer a positive rather than negative story about the victim's past.

The media seminar, sponsored by the San Antonio Light, was among a series of discussions produced by Columbia University to develop dialogue between journalists and law enforcement officials.

Bank releases SMU records to Mattox

DALLAS (AP) — A bank the state Attorney General Jim Mattox said was holding up an investigation into Southern Methodist University's pay-for-play football scandal has turned over records related to the probe, a spokesman said.

Capital Bank representatives contacted the attorney general's office Tuesday and agreed to send over the requested financial documents, said Elna Christopher, a spokesman for Mattox.
